RIYADH (AP) — Canadian Energy Minister Bill McKnight said Sunday he opposed carbon taxes, suggested by Europe and the United States and denounced by oil-producing nations. "Canada and Saudi Arabia have a similar position on the carbon tax," Mr. McKnight told a news conference. "It is a discriminatory tax." He said there were "more efficient ways" of caring for the environment than imposing such a tax. Saudi Arabia and its partners in the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) have been outraged by the European Community's proposal to tax all carbon fuels, both for environmental reasons and to raise extra revenue. The tax would start at $3 a barrel of oil and reach $10 by the year 2000. President Bill Clinton, meanwhile, has proposed an energy tax which would eventually levy about $3.50 on each barrel of imported oil. The Saudi-led GCC has been contemplating retaliatory action in the event the taxes were imposed. The Canadian minister is in Saudi Arabia to promote business for Canadian companies in the oil-rich region. He arrived Thursday, accompanied by representatives of leading Canadian companies of the petroleum processing and engineering, and mineral sectors.

Sheikh linked to blast had Iran tie — report

NEW YORK (R) — Investigators looking into the World Trade Centre bombing have uncovered a financial link between Sheikh Omar Abdul Rahman and Iran's delegation to the United Nations, according to U.S. News and World Report. The magazine, quoting Middle East intelligence sources as reporting that Sheikh Abdul Rahman, the blind cleric whose mosque was attended by several of the suspects indicted for the blast, regularly received large sums of money from the Iranians. Sheikh Abdul Rahman, who has denied any connection to the February 26 blast, which killed six people and injured over 1,000, has in the past denied receiving funds from Iran. The magazine, quoting separate unidentified sources, said the sheikh was also supported by funds forwarded to him from Cairo by one of his ex-wives. The intelligence sources told the magazine the sheikh, who is fighting deportation from the United States, sent some of his cash to Cairo, where it was used to finance extremist activities. His pipeline was exposed, the magazine said, when Egyptian police caught one of his couriers.

Parties give Rabin one more week to solve crisis

TEL AVIV (R) — The leftist Meretz faction gave Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin one more week Sunday to solve a cabinet crisis overshadowing Arab-Israeli peace talks. Meretz Minister of Absorption Yair Tsaban said his faction agreed to the extension when Mr. Rabin made it clear he would ask for no further time. "He (Rabin) repeated that if by next Sunday, in another week ... another arrangement agreeable to us is not found ... the agreement we reached will take effect," Mr. Tsaban told army radio. "Even if the meaning is that the government for an interim period will have to depend on the support of only 61 members of Knesset (parliament) the prime minister will keep his word and implement that arrangement," Mr. Tsaban added.

Sudan accuses rebels of breaking ceasefire

KHARTOUM (AP) — The Sudanese government Sunday accused rebels of breaking a two-month ceasefire shortly after peace talks between the two sides broke off with no agreement. Major General Mohammad Abdullahi Oweida, Sudanese army spokesman, said rebels from the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) loyal to John Garang have killed three government troops in the past five days. He said the two soldiers were killed when they drove over land mines planted by the insurgents in Equatoria state in the south. Another soldier was killed in SPLA shelling of the government-held town of Luka in the same state.

Rafsanjani defends his economic record

NICOSIA (R) — Iranian President Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani, facing presidential elections next month, Sunday defended his government's "unprecedented" economic record over the last four years. Mr. Rafsanjani, quoted by the Iranian news agency IRNA, said economic growth had reached 8.3 per cent, unemployment had fallen to 11 per cent from 14.9 per cent, and imports of wheat had halved since 1989 despite a population increase. "I think what has been done over the past few years regarding the consolidation of the economic infrastructure of the country has been unprecedented throughout history," IRNA reported Mr. Rafsanjani as telling a news conference.

German president urges no violence over asylum limits

BONN (R) — German President Richard von Weizsäcker Sunday urged protesters to avoid violence when parliament meets this week to pass a controversial law aimed at limiting immigration by restricting political asylum rights. In a rare statement on a planned political rally, Mr. Weizsäcker called for calm from up to 10,000 demonstrators expected to convene on Bonn Wednesday for a decisive final debate in parliament's lower house. "Any attempt from outside to put pressure on the lower or upper house of parliament with illegal means or even violence would only be an assault on our constitution," he said.

Eritrea born as Africa's newest state

ASMARA (R) — The Republic of Eritrea became Africa's newest independent state at midnight Sunday under the leadership of the man who led its long secessionist war with Ethiopia. President Isayas Afewerki was elected head of state on Saturday by the Eritrean National Council, the new country's transitional ruling body. He immediately pledged that Eritrea will be a democratic state. "The guarantee and continuation of democracy and democratic institutions are the pillars of law and the establishment of a constitutional government. These are the priorities of our future work," he said, according to the voice of the Broad Masses of Eritrea radio. Mr. Afewerki is the leader of the Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF).

Red Cross demands end to Israeli abuse of Palestinian rights

Sommaruga reaffirms Fourth Geneva Convention applicable to W. Bank, Gaza

OCCUPIED JERUSALEM (AP) — The president of the Red Cross met with Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin Sunday and demanded that the Jewish state end human rights violations in the occupied territories.

Meanwhile, the Israeli government voted to accept a modest investment proposal for the occupied territories as purchasing power in the occupied Gaza Strip dropped to zero, Israel Radio reported.

Red Cross chief Cornelio Sommaruga cited Israel's closure of the occupied West Bank and Gaza, the recent rash of army killings of Palestinian civilians, army house demolitions and tough conditions in Israeli detention camps in the occupied territories.

Mr. Sommaruga told reporters after the one-hour meeting that he demanded "quite firmly" that Israel apply all provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention which protects people under occupation.

Israel contends that it observes the humanitarian spirit of the convention, but that the status of the West Bank and Gaza has yet to be determined as occupied.

Mr. Sommaruga rejected the argument Sunday, saying the provisions clearly apply to the occupied territories.

The president of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) said the most pressing issue was the high number of civilian deaths. In a one-week period this month, 13 Palestinians were killed by Israeli soldiers, including a toddler, a 10-year-old and a 13-year-old.

"I consider that using live ammunition is a serious problem, particularly when we see the consequences, with many people killed, particularly children," he said.

He also said the army practice of demolishing houses where wanted Palestinians hide out was a "provocation."

Since the start of the Palestinian uprising against occupation in December 1987, Israeli troops and civilians have killed 1,112 Palestinians, and Israeli human rights observers say 65 were aged 14 and younger.

Mr. Rabin's spokesman, Gad Ben-Ari, said the killings of civilians were "a tragedy" and that the government was "very sorry about it." But Mr. Rabin told Mr. Sommaruga the deaths were largely to blame on the increasing Palestinian use of firearms which required a tougher Israeli response, Mr. Ben-Ari said.

Israel sealed off the occupied territories on March 30, barring 1.8 million Palestinians from entering Israel and occupied Arab East Jerusalem.

Mr. Sommaruga called the closure "collective punishment."

Mr. Rabin pointed to recent decisions easing the restrictions, such as allowing more than 20,000 Palestinians to return to their jobs in Israel and permitting some access to East Jerusalem mosques and churches. "It could be there will be additional steps in the future," Mr. Ben-Ari said.

Before the closure, 120,000 Palestinians worked in Israel, and their wages made up one-third of the income of the occupied territories.

The cabinet decided Sunday to invest 30 million shekels ($11 million) in the occupied territories over two months to create 20,000 jobs, and decide on further spending in a few weeks. Left-wing ministers had proposed investing 250 million shekels ($91 million), but the proposal was rejected.

General Danny Rotschild, who coordinates government policy in the occupied territories, told the cabinet that residents of the Gaza Strip had lost all purchasing power, Israel Radio said. The radio quoted him as saying merchants were unable to load goods, but that Gazans were not yet starving.

The government would employ 7,000 Palestinians cleaning streets and buildings in Gaza for a daily wage of 25 shekels ($9), the radio said.

Rabat agrees to probe alleged rights abuses

RABAT (R) — Morocco has agreed to investigate alleged human rights abuses in the kingdom after two days of talks with an Amnesty International delegation, a leader of the London-based rights group said Sunday.

Amnesty Deputy Secretary-General Hervé Seiger of Switzerland said his team had raised with the Consultative Council for Human Rights questions of torture in custody, prisoners of conscience and the reported disappearance of hundreds of people.

Their 18 hours of talks on Friday and Saturday, just days after a sharp attack on Amnesty by King Hassan III was broadcast on French television, had "established a dialogue which was very frank and positive and will be continued," Mr. Seiger said.

"It was a very good start," he added.

Rabat lawyer Mohammed Ziane, a member of the multi-party rights council appointed by King Hassan three years ago, said the talks with the three Amnesty delegates were held "in a very good ambience" with an exchange of views of contentious issues.

Both sides agreed joint working groups could be set up to investigate specific complaints. Mr. Seiger said he was leaving Sunday but a member of his team, Elizabeth Hodgkin, would stay on for a week to have talks with non-government organisations.

Kuwait assembly wants to double army size — paper

KUWAIT (R) — Kuwait's opposition-dominated parliament is studying a plan to double the strength of the army to 40,000 men over the next 10 years, a newspaper reported Sunday.

"There is a possibility that the international situation might change and Kuwait could be threatened," Abdul Mohsen Al Mudei, spokesman of the assembly's interior and defence committee, was quoted as saying by the Arab Times.

"This is why we should build an army and make national security our top priority," he said in an interview with the English-language newspaper.

"If we succeed in building an army of 40,000 to 50,000 men within the next 10 years and supply them with advanced and sophisticated weaponry, then we can say we will be secure in our own country."

Mr. Mudei said without elaborating that the government was cooperating with the committee in its studies on the issue.

Iraq invaded Kuwait in August 1990, quickly overrunning heavily outnumbered Kuwaiti forces, and proclaimed the emirate its 19th province. A U.S.-led coalition of Western and Arab armies expelled the Iraqis in February 1991. Mr. Mudei emphasised Kuwait was not likely to face serious threats in the near future because "the international security system that liberated Kuwait is still holding."

After the war the emirate signed 10-year defence pacts with the United States, France and Britain. It plans to sign one with Russia later this year. Kuwait's armed forces are believed to number up to 20,000 men.

The emirate has military hardware on order from the United States worth $4.5 billion over the next 10 years.

Mr. Mudei did not say where the extra manpower for an expanded army would come from. An army of 50,000 would represent eight per cent of Kuwait's 620,000 population.

The committee this month approved a draft law that would enable the army to recruit foreign nationals for employment in officer ranks. But political observers have expressed doubts as to whether the measure will be passed by the plenary assembly and the government.

Kuwait to purchase Russian weapons

KUWAIT (AP) — Defence Minister Sheikh Ali Al Sabah says Kuwait will buy Russian weapons and send military staff to Moscow for training, the Al Anba daily reported Sunday.

He also told the Al Anba daily that some 200 senior military officers will be replaced in a shuffle to be announced next month.

Sheikh Ali said in an interview that a Kuwaiti military delegation is currently visiting Russia to buy "light and heavy arms that are suitable for the capabilities and the needs of the Kuwaiti army."

He did not elaborate on the type of weapons or the value of the planned acquisitions.

Kuwait is already buying U.S.-built Patriot anti-missile batteries, and 256 U.S. Abrams M1-A2 main battle tanks in a $4.5 billion deal, part of a 10-year plan to rebuild Kuwait's armed forces.

It is also replacing its aging French-built Mirage and U.S.-made Skyhawk combat aircraft with 40 American F/A-18 Hornet fighters under a $1.6 billion deal.

France is supplying 12 high-speed patrol boats for the navy.

Kuwait is going to sign a 10-year defence pact with Russia in August.

That agreement, similar to those already signed with the United States, Britain and France since the 1991 Gulf war, calls for joint training.

Sheikh Ali said the pact with Russia would be the last Kuwait will sign with "friendly countries."

The Russians, along with other cash-strapped republics in the former Soviet Union, are making a determined push into the lucrative Gulf arms market, until now the preserve of the United States, Britain and France.

Kuwait, which is rebuilding its military virtually from the ground up in the aftermath of the 1990 Iraqi invasion, plans to spend more than $12 billion over the next decade on defence.

In the past, Gulf states were reluctant to purchase unfamiliar Soviet equipment, difficult to integrate with Western systems.

But they are showing a new keenness because the Russians are selling off their surplus weaponry at bargain-basement rates to get their hands on desperately needed hard currency.

The United Arab Emirates (UAE) recently acquired some 400 BMP-3 armoured fighting vehicles and many more. Victor Glukhikh, chairman of the Russian committee for Defence Industries, toured the Gulf last April seeking to drum up business.

Settlers' mood mixes fear and militancy

By Karin Laub

KOKHAV HASHAHAR, occupied West Bank — Shimon Yezersky, a New York-born dentist, and his wife, Yehudith, are full of optimism on their first day in their new red-roofed house in this Jewish settlement.

But the newcomers' upbeat mood contrasts with the anger and fear among many of the more than 110,000 longer-term settlers in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

They have seen fewer newcomers since Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's government cut subsidies. It was cheap home loans and tax breaks, rather than religious reasons, that attracted many settlers, and sales of new homes in the settlements are down sharply.

Some Israelis are still coming, often, like the Yezerskys, driven by a belief they are reclaiming the land promised to the Jews by God.

"It's my dream home. All I'm missing is a picket fence," says Mrs. Yezersky, 27, surrounded by movers' boxes and holding her 6-year-old son.

"I hope to live here for the next 30 years," adds her husband, 33.

The long-time settlers worry that U.S.-backed peace talks may lead to autonomy for the occupied territories' 1.8 million Palestinians, or worse, to settlements being uprooted in an eventual land-for-peace agreement.

Some promise civil disobedience to block autonomy. Others threaten to use guns, with extremists saying they would even fire at soldiers who tried to move Jews from the occupied territories.

"This will be a jungle," said settler Aharon Domb, who like many of his compatriots regularly carries a gun.

In Kokhav Hashahar, where 700 observant Jews live on a windswept hilltop overlooking the Jordan Valley, settlement leader Moti Zelikovitch said residents bitterly oppose Palestinian autonomy.

"You have to understand one simple thing. This is our country and only ours, and anyone who wants to live here can only do so under Israeli rule," he said.

Settlers are incensed over Israel's agreement to establish a Palestinian police force under autonomy, saying that would allow Arabs in disguise to kill settlers with impunity.

Zelikovitch, a burly 36-year-old, said he would shoot if he encountered a Palestinian policeman. "The question is who draws faster and shoots first," he said.

Mr. Yezersky, who came to Israel seven years ago, said he would have his gun at hand when meeting an Arab cop, but would never fight Israeli soldiers.

STATISTICS on Jewish settlements in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, the Golan Heights and Arab East Jerusalem:

Population

The West Bank — 125,500 in 130 settlements (according to settlers); 107,000 (according to Peace Now, which opposes settlements).

The Gaza Strip — 5,000 in 17 settlements (settlers); 4,000 (Peace Now).

The Golan Heights — 14,000 in 32 settlements.

East Jerusalem — 140,000 in seven suburbs; East Jerusalem has a Palestinian population of 160,000.

Home construction and sales

The West Bank and Gaza — 8,000 units being built by government, 3,000 with private funds; settler leaders say 1,750 sold since July.

East Jerusalem — 15,000 units under construction in Jewish suburb of Pisgat Zeev; nearly all sold.

The Golan Heights — 1,700 units under construction; 400 sold.

Subsidies

Previous conservative government subsidised all 179 settlements; new liberal government reduced that to 77 — 32 in Golan, 16 in Gaza and 29 in the West Bank.

The subsidies include: Seven per cent income tax break; grants of up to 25,000 shekels ($9,000) and loans of same amount for home buyers; 90 per cent cut in kindergarten fees; exemption from taxes for new businesses for 10 years and grants of up to 38 per cent of investment.

"I just finished a month of reserve duty last Friday. I am the Israeli army," he said.

Like all other Israeli men, settlers do army reserve duty for about a month each year. At home, they carry army-issued guns for protection and many own other firearms.

The settlers' anger has raised fears of a new "Jewish underground" like that of the 1980s that carried out bomb attacks against Palestinians.

In April, an armed vigilante squad calling itself the "Judea police" won attention posing for pictures while patrolling Arab neighbourhoods. Settler leaders distanced themselves, saying it was a fringe group blowing hot air.

Mr. Rabin reportedly has ordered the Shin Bet secret service to step up surveillance of the heads of settlement regional councils, including tapping their phones.

Some settler leaders argue against violence, saying their most crucial battle is for Israeli public opinion — today about evenly split.

A showdown with the army or vigilante justice would only sway Israelis against the settlers, said Yehiel Leiter, 33, from the West Bank settlement of Eli.

Mr. Leiter, who grew up in the United States, visits settlements lecturing on civil disobedience patterned 1960s American student protests.

He dreams of embarrassing the government by having thousands of Jews carted off to jail for blocking roads. "How is Rabin going to look us in the eye?" he asked.

Still, only about 4,000 people up for a settler demonstration in Jerusalem in April. Mr. Leiter blamed poor organisation.

In the long run, settlers are hoping for a population surge once 8,000 homes being built by the government and 3,000 with private money are finished.

So far, however, sales have been slow, said Bob Lang, spokesman of the main settlement movement, Eumunim. He said potential buyers were turned off by the government subsidy cuts that have raised home prices by thousands of dollars.

Mr. Lang said that since July when Mr. Rabin took office, about 1,750 homes have been sold to the settlements — a far cry from the 10,000 houses Eumunim had hoped to sell in the past year.

Still, he said, the settler population has increased by about 10,000 to 130,000 in that period. However, Peace Now, a group opposed to Jewish settlement, contends that the increase was from 106,800 to 111,000 and that most was from children born to settlers.

In Kokhav Hashahar, 20 to 30 new homes have been sold, and there are plans for a new synagogue. But 45 additional plots cleared under the last government are likely to remain vacant because no private buyers have expressed interest.

Moshe Har-Melech, who runs a small electronics factory in Kokhav Hashahar, said he might put a planned expansion in Jerusalem or the United States since Mr. Rabin canceled many breaks for settlement businesses.

Mr. Har-Melech will not get the 100 per cent tax exemption over 10 years and 40 per cent government grant for investment that he received for his original factory. He is bitter about the switch in policy.

"The government sent us here," he said. "We were once considered pioneers, and now we are considered the enemies of the people."

MIDDLE EAST NEWS IN BRIEF

A Algerian prosecutor demands death for 15

ALGIERS (R) — An Algerian prosecutor demanded the death penalty Saturday against 15 Muslim fundamentalists accused of multiple acts of violence including a bomb attack that killed nine people at Algiers airport. The 15 included Mansour Mekiani, 48-year-old head of the armed Islamic Group (Groupe Islamique Armee), the prosecutor demanded life prison sentences for a Mussalaha. The prosecutor demanded the special Algerian court but made no recommendation in the case of Ben Arouz Zedda, former vice-president of the now-banned Islamic Salvation Front (FIS). The trial of 54 Muslim activists, including 26 on the run, marked its 14th day on Saturday. The 54 are charged with several acts of violence, including the August airport bomb blast that also wounded 128 people. Mr. Mekiani's fighters are suspected of killing seven soldiers during an attack last year on a naval yard in Algiers harbour. "Were I released now, I would continue my jihad (holy war) against the authorities," Mr. Mekiani, who was wounded and arrested in July, told the court Thursday. The prosecutor demanded "the heaviest sentences" against the 26 defendants still at large and jail terms ranging from five to 20 years for the remaining seven accused. Six of the Muslim activists have been sentenced to death since a state of emergency was proclaimed in Feb. 1992 after the scrapping of a general election the FIS was poised to win. Six were executed this year and a seventh who was sentenced in his absence was shot dead in a gunfight in Algiers in March.

Canadian killed, Australian injured in Iran

NICOSIA (AP) — A Canadian diplomat has been killed and an Australian diplomat injured in a car crash in Iran's northern Mazandaran province, the official Islamic Republic News Agency reported Sunday. The agency, monitored in Cyprus, quoted the Hamshahri daily as saying the Canadian was identified as Derrick John Haro, first secretary and commercial attaché at his country's embassy in Tehran. The Australian was named as David William McLackan, his embassy's first secretary. IRNA said the foreign ministry in Tehran confirmed the accident Friday on the highway between Neka and Behshar in Mazandaran, a report region on the Caspian Sea northwest of Tehran. The agency said the diplomat's Iranian driver, Australian embassy employee Babak Seddiq, was also killed and McLackan's parents, passengers in the auto, were injured along with six Iranians in the bus.

Kuwait Airways seeks $1.3b to buy Airbus

KUWAIT (R) — State-owned Kuwait Airways Corporation (KAC) said Saturday it was seeking loans totalling $1.3 billion to finance the purchase of 18 Airbus planes. The Kuwait News agency (KUNA) quoted company chairman Ahmad Al Meshari as saying the purchases would take place over the next four years. Mr. Meshari said the purchases were aimed at boosting the size of the KAC fleet, depleted during Iraq's seven-month occupation of the emirate, as well as replacing some of the older planes currently in service. Iraq has so far only returned eight of the 15 planes it seized after its August 1990 invasion. Mr. Meshari was speaking at Kuwait airport as KAC took delivery of an Airbus A310-300, the fourth of the 18 planes on order. The delivery lifts the airline's current fleet size to 13 aircraft, including five leased planes. Mr. Meshari said KAC, whose 1992 profit jumped more than 50 per cent to $18 million, could meet all financial obligations from its own reserves and would not require government assistance. He said it was seeking loans from financial institutions in Kuwait or other Gulf states.

Teddy Kollek discharged from hospital

TEL AVIV (AP) — Jerusalem's Israeli mayor, Teddy Kollek, who suffered chest pains last week, was discharged from hospital Sunday and went home to rest, officials said. Hospital officials said that Mr. Kollek was in good spirits and recovered healthily. "He was in high spirits and I assume he will resume his work very soon," said Prof. Shlomo Stern, director of Bikur Holim Hospital. Mr. Kollek was admitted to the hospital last Wednesday with chest pains after a busy day of appearances. Mr. Kollek had a minor problem with his heart, but did not have a heart attack, Dr. Stern said. He said Mr. Kollek was not asked to curb his schedule. Mr. Kollek, who turns 82 on Thursday, was expected to return to work in a few days, Israeli Radio said.

Turkey launches work on new dam on Euphrates

SANLIURFA, Turkey (AP) — President Suleyman Demirel Sunday broke the ground for a fourth dam on the Euphrates River, part of a massive Turkish water supply and electricity project. A consortium of German, French, Belgian, Austrian and Turkish companies will build the new Birecik dam in this southeastern province. The 672-megawatt dam is to be completed in 1998 at a cost of $1.7 billion. The dams are part of an ambitious plan called the Southeastern Anatolia Project. It incorporates 22 dams and 19 hydroelectric power stations on the Tigris and Euphrates rivers at an estimated cost of $25 billion. The project has worried Turkey's relatively water-poor Arab neighbours, which have demanded an international treaty for sharing the waters. Iraq has complained that the construction of the Birecik dam near the border with Syria would decrease water flow beyond mutually decided levels.

Pakistan sets record for drug busts

ISLAMABAD (AP) — Pakistan set records for drug busts this month, with five major raids resulting in the seizure of 60,000 kilograms of hashish and 200 kilograms of heroin, narcotics officials said Sunday. Ershad Hussein of the Pakistan Narcotics Control Board estimated the street value of the hashish at $150 million and the heroin $170 million. The most recent bust was late Saturday in the remote mountains of southeastern Baluchistan province. A dozen navy officers in three helicopters swooped down on a drug smuggler's hideout, confiscating 40,000 kilograms of hashish — a record haul, Mr. Hussein said. The hashish was being readied for shipment out of the country via one of a dozen hidden ports along the Markan coastline, he said. The 1,500-kilometre Markan coast is the most popular drug smuggling route because it is sparsely populated and almost impossible to patrol.

Wrongly accused hijacker fulfills quest

(SLO (AP) — A quiet Somali refugee finally has completed a quest that was interrupted three months ago when he was wrongly identified as the hijacker of a Lufthansa airliner.

Farah Siad Shuriye tracked down the wife and children he left behind when he fled civil war in his country in 1990. He has fulfilled a vow and brought them to his adopted home of Kristiansand, Norway, his attorney said.

"It was wonderful to see them again," said 32-year-old Shuriye in an interview with the Oslo newspaper Aftenposten last Friday. "I longed for my family and thought of nothing else. Why would I have hijacked an airplane?"

Refugees in the town on the southern tip of Norway, where Mr. Shuriye found asylum in 1991, had helped him buy a ticket from Norway to Ethiopia so he could search for his wife, Halawi Elmi Shire, and their three children.

Instead, Mr. Shuriye and 103 others spent a harrowing 11 hours aboard Lufthansa Flight 529 on Feb. 11, while a hijacker — later identified as Nebi Zewolde Demekle, a 20-year-old Ethiopian living in Morocco — forced their plane to fly to New York.

For a few hours that day, German and U.S. officials named Mr. Shuriye as the hijacker.

"It was not good that my name was spread all over the world like that. It has caused me problems. I often feel that people look at me and think, 'there goes the hijacker,'" he said.

His attorney, Knut Myhre, said by telephone from Kristiansand that Mr. Shuriye brought his family home last month, with no fanfare.

Mr. Myhre said he has asked the German government to compensate the refugee for the mistake, since the German interior ministry told U.S. officials and the news media that Mr. Shuriye was the hijacker.

"I don't know of any similar cases in the past. That is why we just asked for an offer from the Germans," Mr. Myhre said.

Arab-German, Amman industry chambers pledge to exchange economic information

AMMAN (J.T.) — The head of the Arab-German Chamber of Industry and Commerce Luthar Spaeth Sunday ended a three-day visit to Jordan by signing a memorandum of understanding, paving the way for economic and trade cooperation between his chamber and the Amman Chamber of Industry.

Under the terms of the memorandum, which was signed by Amman Chamber of Industry President Khalidoun Abu Hassan, the two sides pledged to exchange information on economic affairs in Germany and Jordan and create opportunities for an exchange of visits by businessmen and industrialists from the two countries.

The two sides also agreed to set up a joint memorandum council, grouping representatives of various trade and economic sectors in Germany and Jordan that will provide the two chambers with information, laws and regulations and other necessary information pertaining to the economy in the two countries, as well as information related to external trade, investment opportunities, existing joint industrial firms and prospects for launching new ventures that produce commodities for export.

In addition, the joint council will be charged with providing help to visiting businessmen from either country to help them conclude trade transactions.

According to the memorandum the council will hold annual meetings to appraise its own performance and close gaps that could hamper trade exchanges. Chamber of industry sources said that the memorandum will go into force immediately. Before leaving Amman for home, Mr. Spaeth and his accompanying delegation visited the Sabab Industrial City on the outskirts of Amman and inspected its services and the opportunities for industrial investors.

Fayez Suheimat, director general of the Jordan Industrial Estates Corporation (JIEC), briefed the visitors on the development of the industrial city.

Minister of Industry and Trade Abdullah Ensour and Mr. Abu Hassan saw off the German delegation upon their departure from Amman.

Damascus talks point to gap in Arab investments

AMMAN (Petra) — A conference by Arab investors and businessmen held in Damascus last week pointed to the huge gap between investments in joint Arab projects in the Arab World on the one hand and the Arab countries' investments in foreign countries on the other; and called on Arab governments to facilitate the flow of capital towards Arab projects. Falah Qudah, director of the Jordanian Free Zones Corporation (JFZC), who represented Jordan at the conference, said upon his return here Sunday that although investments in joint projects carried out in the Arab World amounted to $25 billion, Arab investments in foreign countries reached $670 billion by the end of 1992.

He said Arab governments were called on to improve investment climates in their countries and open the way for investors to bring in capital by providing the appropriate infrastructure and convenient legislations.

A total of 670 participants attended the three-day meeting, including businessmen and investors from Arab and foreign countries, as well as representatives of insurance companies, banks financial institutions, joint Arab companies and chambers of commerce.

They reviewed working papers and focused attention on areas for investments in Syria and other Arab countries and explored the prospects of developing a pan-Arab strategy.

Crown Prince inaugurates R&D programme at Safawi

SAFAWI (Petra) — His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan Sunday inaugurated the Badia Research and Development Programme at Safawi in the northern Jordanian badia, some 156 kilometres northeast of Amman.

At a meeting with the project staff, Prince Hassan said the programme has a unique status worldwide because it is being implemented in an area characterised by abundance of ground and surface water and by special geological and economic features.

The Crown Prince voiced hope that the project, which receives the support of His Majesty King Hussein, will serve as a nucleus for a centre on higher studies on the badia, to be run by motivated people from the area.

Prince Hassan stressed the need for utilising the existing knowledge and expertise in the badia to set up such projects designed to develop these regions which have so far remained under exploited.

He called on badia residents to exploit the resources in their regions in a balanced and integrated manner, noting in this regard that the badia constitutes 80 per cent of the total area of Jordan.

Prince Hassan said that the badia development programme would not have seen light had it not been for the cooperation between Jordanian and foreign universities, as well as the Geographic Studies Centre and the Higher Council for Science and Technology (HCST).

The Crown Prince expressed hope that the programme will be one of the great landmarks of development in the badia region and the entire world.

He stressed the importance of cooperation between the universities involved in the programme and the concerned ministries, such as the ministries of Water and Irrigation, Agriculture and Energy, in extending the programme's lesson to other regions. "Such coordination will make it possible to carry out similar projects in other regions in the central and south badia," Prince Hassan said. He added "it is high time to think of the badia region as an integrated environment in terms of services and agricultural development."

Commenting on the programme, Prince Hassan said it is scientific, but modest start, given that it is financed through donations and gifts and not through government funds.

He called for utilising the special studies available on the development of the badia and stressed the need for keeping such studies at an effective information centre so that it can be of benefit to researchers from the badia itself.

Prince Hassan highlighted the role of development studies and called for the exploitation of basic natural and human resources to develop the badia region.

He also called for benefiting from international experiences in this field and underlined the importance of utilising the unexploited areas in the badia.

Upon his arrival at the project site, the Crown Prince toured the various sections and was briefed on its objectives, aspirations and future needs by Programme Director Abdul Rahman Fatafah.

The programme was initiated by the Higher Council for Science and Technology, the Royal British Geographic Society, in cooperation with Jordanian universities and several foreign universities.

The three-year programme covers an area of 11,210 square kilometres, or 12.5 per cent of the total area of Jordan.

It aims to ensure a sustainable and comprehensive development of the Jordanian badia, by turning it into a basic production and investment attraction centre, thus contributing to supporting the national economy and improving the people's living conditions.

The programme encourages group work and the optimal utilisation of natural resources.

Prince Hassan was accompanied by His Royal Highness Prince Faisal Ben Al Hussein, the ministers of Agriculture, Labour, Planning, Water and Irrigation and Social Development and senior government officials, in addition to the British ambassador to Jordan.

Bridges to close May 25 and 26

AMMAN (Petra) — The Public Security Department (PSD) Sunday announced new arrangements for travel across the King Hussein and Prince Mohammad bridges to and from the Israeli occupied Arab lands on Tuesday and Wednesday May 25 and 26.

The statement said the two bridges will be closed after 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday and all day Wednesday, they will reopen to normal traffic on May 27.

The PSD, which gave no reason for the closures, requested travellers to refrain from heading for the bridges on May 26 and to allow for urgent cases to pass on May 25.

Only the King Hussein Bridge is assigned for travellers to and from the occupied territories, and the Prince Mohammad Bridge is assigned to trucks crossings in both directions.

In the meantime, PSD centres in Amman and other towns opened Saturday for the registration of travellers to the occupied West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

5 new care, training institutions for handicapped children to go up

AMMAN (Petra) — The Ministry of Social Development Sunday announced that it was increasing the number of institutions which offer special education to handicapped children and expanding the scope of its financial aid and assistance to needy families.

Minister of Social Development Amin Awad Mashaqbeh said in a statement that five new institutions are being set up in Maan, Tafleh, Mafrag, Ajloun and Aqaba regions to offer care and training to mentally retarded and deaf children.

These centres are expected to open next month, except the centres for the deaf which will open at the start of the next scholastic year in August, because their curricula are supervised and run by the Ministry of Education, said the minister.

In addition to these projects, work is under-way to expand the present social development centres and institutions to cope with the growing demand for their services, added Dr. Mashaqbeh.

The centre for handicapped children in Jerash will be enlarged from 75 to 150 beds by August this year, at a cost of JD 360,000, he said.

Another centre at Adnanieh, near Karak, is being expanded at a cost of JD 25,000, and the Maan centre expansion will cost 16,000, added Dr. Mashaqbeh.

Furthermore, the ministry will open new classes for handicapped children at centres run by voluntary organisations and ministry of education schools, such as the one in Koura in the Irbid district and another at Ruseifa, said the minister.

He announced also that the ministry will conduct a survey to locate handicapped children to provide them with assistance and care. The survey will be conducted at Wadi Araba, south of the Dead Sea, with the help of a specialised team, according to Dr. Mashaqbeh.

He said the same team will also collect information on families and determine those most in need of urgent help.

Referring to the ministry's financial assistance to needy families in Jordan, Dr. Mashaqbeh pointed out that such families at present receive assistance ranging from JD 25 to JD 50 monthly, depending on the their need, noting that the ministry's list of needy people now includes 25,286 names.

The ministry thus spends nearly J.D. 10.5 million in financial assistance to needy families throughout the country, the minister added.

Stressing that no hunger in the actual sense of the word exists in Jordan, Dr. Mashaqbeh discussed that the ministry of social development, acting through the National Aid Fund NAF will continue to search for the needy and to provide financial and in-kind assistance to them.

By a Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — The University of Jordan's Centre For Strategic Studies (CSS) is organising a three-day conference on "The Jordanian Economy — Problems and Prospects," next month, according to an announcement by the centre Sunday.

Over 30 working papers will be reviewed by participants — mainly economists — from Jordan, Egypt, Iraq, the United States, countries in North Africa, Japan and Mexico, CSS Director Mustafa Hamarneh told the Jordan Times.

Participants in the June 13-15 conference include academicians, activists, businessmen, representatives from the private and public sectors, community leaders and other individuals, said Dr.

Hamarneh. "The conference is the first real attempt at looking critically inward and analysing the past performance of the Jordanian economy and searching for new advantages and determining where to go from here, said Dr. Hamarneh, an economic historian.

He said the papers will cover a wide range of topics including economic development in Jordan between the 1950s and the 1990s, Jordan's foreign debts, the economic restructuring programme, unemployment in Jordan, investments and legislations to encourage investments, Jordan and the Gulf states, and European-Jordanian economic relationships.

According to Dr. Hamarneh, the conference is open to the public.

Pushed into a corner

FROM DISGRUNTLED young Palestinian refugees calling for shedding the blood of Palestinian negotiators as traitors, to the more subtle expressions of frustration with the peace process by a growing number of moderate Palestinians, the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) is being steadily pushed into a corner for not quitting the Arab-Israeli talks.

The last blow to the PLO and its Chairman Yasser Arafat came from where it was least expected: The Speaker of the Palestine National Council Abdul Hamid Sayeh who Saturday announced plans to resign in protest over the peace process.

"I do not want to be accused of damaging the Palestinian cause... Tragedies are befalling the Palestinian people and I do not want to be blamed in history," Sheikh Sayeh said after announcing his plans to end his political career. Calls to abandon the negotiations also came from Palestinian negotiators, stemmed by popular pressure as much as loss of faith in the viability of the negotiations.

When the peace process first started in Madrid nineteen months ago, Palestinian youngsters threw olive branches instead of stones at Israeli tanks and soldiers patrolling, and controlling, their streets. The negotiations were hoped to be the vehicle that would carry both Arabs and Israelis to the safety and plenitude of peace.

Nine fruitless rounds of talks later, more and more Palestinians view the process as a mechanism for legalising the occupation of their land, the theft of their resources and the continuous violation of their rights.

This sea-change in the Palestinian perception of the peace process is sure to force what Palestinian, and Israeli, hardliners have long sought: a decision to quit the talks.

In the face of growing opposition to the negotiations, even within the organisation's rank and file, the PLO will soon find itself having to choose between two equally painful and nightmarish scenarios: dropping the peace talks in response to the demands of its constituency or losing ground to the benefit of fundamentalists.

The PLO and the Palestinians will not be the only losers in the event of either scenarios coming true; the whole region will be dragged back into the annals of despair and chaos, with reverberations felt far beyond the Middle East unless breakthroughs are achieved in the negotiations.

And for that to happen, Israel, and indeed the United States, have to start acting more responsibly.

The Palestinians have made all the concessions they can offer to get-and-keep the peace talks alive. Israel, on the other hand, has offered little more than empty rhetoric, focusing on its partly genuine but mainly fabricated security concerns.

This must change. And not only for the sake of the Palestinians, but also for the sake of Israelis and the region as a whole.

Israel must approach the peace process with the sincerity and seriousness it deserves. It must get out of its security bubble and give the Palestinians a reason to believe that peace is on Israeli minds as much as it is on theirs. The siege of the occupied territories must be lifted and the human rights situation there must improve. Serious negotiations leading to ensuring the Palestinians' right to self-determination and statehood must come to a soon and fast start.

In all this, the United States must be helping, applying pressure where it is due and offering alternatives to deadlocked situations.

The peace talks started with the declared objective of achieving a just and comprehensive Middle East peace on the basis of a land-for-peace formula and Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338. That no progress has been made towards attaining that goal gives ample justification for the growing discontent with it. And that the horrors of failure require that all play their roles. The Palestinians have long been ready and on the field; the Israelis have yet to engage.

ARABIC PRESS COMMENTARIES

JORDANIAN DAILIES Sunday commented on His Majesty King Hussein's address to the media and his warning against those elements trying to sell out principles and pursue material gains. Al Ra'i Arabic daily said that out of his keenness on helping Jordan to pursue the march of democracy, the King called on the Jordanian journalists to be objective and tackle issues with a spirit of responsibility. The King's address to the local press was a reminder that journalists ought now to abide by the ethics of the profession of journalism and rise to the level of responsibility, said the paper. It said that the law on press and publications, which was provided for in the National Charter, should be respected if the national interests are to be safeguarded. By warning against irresponsible elements, the King has emphasised the fact that the process of democracy and pluralism does not tolerate any such evil elements that tend to harm the country's interests, the paper pointed out. There can be no room for those trying to outbid others through offence and there can be no room for writers not complying with the country's laws and constitution, said the paper. It said that only through responsible and positive action can the national interests be protected.

ARAFAT HJAZI, a columnist in Sawt Al Ahsawi daily, criticised Hanan Ashrawi, the spokeswoman for the Palestinian delegation to the Arab-Israeli peace talks for not being objective in her recent statements. The writer said that while Dr. Haidar Abdul Shafi, the head of the delegation, was calling for a boycott of the talks because of their futility, Dr. Ashrawi was criticising the Palestinian groups who oppose the negotiations, accusing them of being behind their failure. The writer said that Dr. Abdul Shafi, who lives in Gaza where the Israelis are exercising all forms of repression, is in a position to realise the true nature of Israel and its policies against the Palestinians and whether the Israelis are to be trusted at the talks. Noting that the Israelis escalated their repression during the ninth session, the writer said that the Palestinian opposition groups could not be held responsible for the Israeli killing of young people and demolishing Arab homes.

Why Palestinians question the peace process

By Khalil Barhoum

Throughout the better part of 1992, the Arab-Israeli peace talks proceeded at an excruciatingly slow pace, characterised more by stumbling than walking. With the ascent of Labour's Yitzhak Rabin to power, many observers predicted a rejuvenation of the then-suspended negotiations, if only because of Mr. Rabin's own campaign pledges. But since taking office, Mr. Rabin has managed to freeze the talks at their prevaricative Likud status of almost a year ago. Not only that, but since his expulsion of 415 Palestinians to south Lebanon last December, and subsequent defiance of Security Council Resolution 799, calling on his government to repatriate them, the peace process was in a state of limbo until heavy American pressure succeeded in restarting it on April 27.

After a year of futile negotiations it seems that the only genuine accomplishment of the Madrid process so far is that it has taken place at all. Despite the expiry of the deadline the U.S. set for the talks on Oct. 31, 1992, there is still no sense of urgency in Washington. If anything, it is the Palestinians, not the Israelis, who have been roundly scolded, on more than one occasion, for their alleged recalcitrance in the course of the negotiations. According to the New York Times' Thomas Friedman, one of the Bush administration's last acts in office was to call in the Palestinian delegates and "read them the riot act". On Sept. 17, Friedman quoted Mr. Bush's assistant secretary of state for near eastern affairs, Edward Djerejian, as telling the Palestinian negotiating team in Washington that the question of Israeli withdrawal from the West Bank and Gaza was not on the table according to the terms of reference for the talks. The only thing on the table, Mr. Djerejian (who has incidentally been retained by the Clinton administration) reportedly stated, was interim self-rule for the Palestinians, and hence they should "knock off" the talk about "final status".

The effect of the expulsions

Undoubtedly, the political situation has evolved since Friedman first reported this encounter. A new U.S. administration has been installed in Washington; Israel's government, in a self-defeating manoeuvre, expelled over 400 Palestinians to Lebanon shortly before the Bush administration left office; and Warren Christopher, the new secretary of state, struck a separate deal with Israel on Feb. 1, primarily designed to protect the Israeli government from any further confrontation with the Security Council over the issue of the expulsion. Of all these intervening events, however, Israel's decision to expel so many Palestinians all at once, coupled with its refusal to implement Resolution 799, have ultimately thrust the occupied territories into a whirlwind of violence. Furthermore, the Palestinian leaders' decision to return to the negotiations despite repeated assurances to the contrary unless the deportees were all repatriated has caused further strains among the increasingly restive Palestinian population under Israeli occupation.

Having initially managed to draw unneeded international attention to his government with the expulsion decision, Mr. Rabin has contributed to the strengthening of Hamas, the very party he claims to be concerned about. Not only that, but almost as a corollary, the Palestinian leadership's decision to overlook the fate of the deportees and return to the talks implies serious weakening of the secular factions who have been willing to negotiate under the U.S. umbrella. Long before the expulsions took place, the Palestinians in the occupied territories had become disenchanted with lack of progress in the talks and begun to question the wisdom of continuing on a road which seemed likely to lead nowhere. Now that the leadership has decided to go back to the talks without Israel implementing Resolution 799, the Palestinians in the territories are wondering aloud whether their leaders still feel accountable to them.

The expulsions have certainly served as a catalyst for a process of self-examination and reappraisal of the situation by Palestinians everywhere. Many had warned that, by first consenting to Israeli terms for Palestinian involvement in the Madrid conference, the Palestinian side was conceding too much ground before negotiations ever began. These warnings about Palestinian political vulnerability are ringing truer now than ever after the Palestinian leaders decided to abandon, yet again, their previous pledges not to go back to Washington until the expulsion issue was resolved. So in spite of, or perhaps because of, the untenable situation in which the Palestinian negotiating team now finds itself, one is hard-pressed to see any concrete progress since Madrid.

Frustration and resentment

As a result, the Palestinian people are not only angered by Israel's evasive ways and lack of goodwill, but are also directing frustration at their leadership and the Palestinian negotiators, and subjecting both to an acid test in which not only past performance but also future objectives are becoming the subject of intense questioning and appraisal.

In the face of Israel's intransigent human, civil and political rights violations in the West Bank and Gaza, it did not take the people to continue involvement in the peace process. Meanwhile, the Palestinians began looking for successes to the "path to peace", only to be distracted by somewhat ephemeral triumphs, principally on the public relations front, achieved by members of the negotiating team. Not to detract in any way from such individual triumphs, what led to the mounting Palestinian exasperation with the status quo was the growing realisation that the nego-

"Israel's humiliating terms, which are customarily reserved for defeated nations in the aftermath of a war, are viewed by the Palestinians as nothing short of sheer capitulation to continued colonisation of the Palestinian people under the aegis of a revived Pax Americana in the region. But more to the point, the conditions placed on the Palestinians (and the Palestinian leadership's compliance with these conditions) are regarded by many as squandering the moral victories achieved by the intifada."

Palestinians under occupation long to become deeply resentful of the blatant asymmetry between Israel's expressed willingness to reach accommodation with the Palestinians through the peace process on the one hand, and the seemingly never-ending trail of pain and suffering, which Israel in the meantime was visiting on them on a daily basis, on the other. All the while, Israel's defiant and incessant violations were being committed as it shielded itself from criticism because of its declared willingness tiating team as a whole was not winning.

The Palestinians concluded, in essence, that they were being sidetracked by sporadic individual successes and did not realise that what really mattered was the overall outcome. And, unfortunately, the outcome has not been good, not because of failings by the team members, but because the rules of the game have been so devised as to frustrate their potential right from the start, and because the referee, namely the U.S., happens to enjoy a rather incestuous relationship with the other team. Moreover, the Palestinians realised to their dismay that once you start playing the political game you are sternly reminded that the ground rules have to be adhered to throughout the game. That, of course, is where all the stipulations against Palestinian participation in the talks have come back to haunt the Palestinian negotiators, since any attempt at changing the rules has been frowned upon by the Israelis and the U.S. and has been depicted as the inexcusably destructive to the spirit, if not the letter, of the talks. In this case, only outside interference (perhaps through the U.N., the European Community, or both) could help to change the rules.

The politics of defeat

Under such conditions, how does one expect the Palestinians to accomplish anything in the ninth round? They cannot conceivably be expected to triumph under the circumstances. Additionally, they are resourceful enough to realise that Israel simply has no military or political incentive to reach an equitable accommodation with them over the fate of the occupied territories. After all, the Palestinians have not won a war against Israel, nor have they at any time constituted a viable military threat to its security. These political realities (along with the collapse of the former Soviet Union and Iraq's ignominious defeat in the Gulf war) might help in part explain why the Palestinian leadership initially acceded to the humiliating conditions for Palestinian participation in the Madrid conference. With the Palestinian leaders' recent agreement to join the talks despite widespread Palestinian opposition to the decision, one has to conclude that the politics of defeat is still the prevailing paradigm among Palestinian decision-makers.

Furthermore, the intifada has lost its sense of direction and, ultimately, any meaningful impact on the crucial decisions leading to Madrid. With the popular uprising desperately groping to restore its original purpose, the prevalent — albeit reluctant — feeling among most Palestinians was that the intifada phase of the Palestinian struggle was about to give way to the struggle on the political and diplomatic front. For all intents and purposes, the home-grown uprising looked like being neutralised, if not hijacked, by the diplomats who owed their allegiance to the politicians. But when the "diplomats", under extremely difficult conditions, failed to alleviate the ills of the occupation, the level of anger and frustration in the Palestinian street rose almost daily. So, quite clearly, when the expulsions occurred, they merely helped unravel what had been under the surface all along. The Palestinian decision to return to Washington is likely to cause greater damage to Palestinian unity, in the long run, than did the initial decision to go to Madrid.

Squandering the intifada's success

Beyond the violent manifestation of outrage and discontent directed at their Israeli oppressors, the Palestinians under occupation are also signalling to their own leaders their impatience with a peace process that has so far managed, among other things, to legitimise the U.S.-brokered exclusionary rules of conduct for the negotiations. Israel's humiliating terms, which are customarily reserved for defeated nations in the aftermath of a war, are viewed by the Palestinians as nothing short of sheer capitulation to continued colonisation of the Palestinian people under the aegis of a revived Pax Americana in the region. But more to the point, the conditions placed on the Palestinians (and the Palestinian leadership's compliance with these conditions) are regarded by many as squandering the moral victories achieved by the intifada.

And, unless the Palestinian leadership inside and outside the occupied territories delves back into the roots of what it really was that made the U.S. and Israel become suddenly interested in opening a dialogue with the Palestinians in the first place (i.e. the intifada), the Palestinian leaders, most likely, will run the risk of becoming like flowers in a vase — looking pretty but cut off from their roots. At the same time, if those leaders truly hope to remedy the intolerable situation stemming from such unacceptable conditions, this indeed might be the time: otherwise, the coalescence of American and Israeli goals in the "peace negotiations" — symbolised by the constant attempts to simultaneously undercut the Palestinian leadership and legitimise Israel's colonial grip over Palestinian land — will soon acquire a life of its own and, tragically, might become irreversible.

ADL CASE

Espionage character returns unexpectedly

By Jane Hunter

SACRAMENTO, Ca. — Tom Gerard, the former San Francisco police officer who figures in the unfolding espionage scandal involving the Anti-Defamation League (ADL), was arrested on April 6 at San Francisco airport as he stepped off a flight from the Philippines. "Mr. Gerard's return was unexpected and representatives of the hundreds of organisations and thousands of individuals targeted in the espionage operation are concerned that the investigation will be disrupted as authorities scramble to file charges against him."

Mr. Gerard fled to the Philippines and abruptly retired from the San Francisco Police Department (SFPD) late last year after the FBI questioned him and Roy Bullock, an undercover ADL agent, about selling intelligence on local activists to South African government agents. Since then the San Francisco district attorney has released court documents alleging that Mr. Gerard was one of dozens of law enforcement officials around the U.S. who supplied Mr. Bullock and other ADL "fact-finders" with confidential information on leftist, Arab-American, anti-apartheid and white supremacist organisations and individuals. The ADL has insisted that, while it paid Mr. Bullock every week for 33 years to spy on right-wing hate groups, it did not know about his other spying activities. But raids last month on the prominent Jewish organisation's San Francisco and Los Angeles offices are believed to have turned up evidence undermining that claim.

Because both Mr. Bullock and Mr. Gerard worked closely with the local FBI office, a congressional investigation is under way into whether the bureau was using the ADL to collect intelligence on non-violent political groups which it could not legally collect itself. The district attorney's investigation has been focused on whether Mr. Bullock and the ADL violated state laws protecting the privacy of records and whether the ADL properly reported its weekly payments to Mr. Bullock. The San Francisco Police Commission was conducting a parallel investigation into Mr. Gerard's passing to Mr. Bullock police intelligence files that had been ordered destroyed and information from law enforcement data bases.

Added to fears that these investigations may be thrown into disarray while authorities prepare the speedy trial to which Mr. Gerard is legally entitled, there is concern that the CIA may circumscribe the proceedings against him. Mr. Gerard left the SFPD to work with the CIA in El Salvador between 1982 and 1985 and, according to court documents, Roy Bullock has indicated that Mr. Gerard was reporting to the CIA on the work the two did for South Africa. In an April 27 interview with the Los Angeles Times, Mr. Gerard threatened to forestall moves to prosecute him by "gray mailing" the government with evidence that the CIA trained and financed Central American death squads during the 1980s.

Mr. Gerard gave Capt. John Willett, his former commanding officer in the SFPD, seemingly contradictory reasons for his sudden decision to return to California. Mr. Willett told local reporters that Mr. Gerard said he feared the CIA was planning to kill him, that he was missing his family, and that he wanted his day in court — Middle East International.

Pakistan reeling from U.S. attacks

By Kathy Gannon
The Associated Press

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Pakistan is reeling from verbal attacks by the United States, an old ally that now accuses it of supporting terrorists, building nuclear bombs and dragging its feet on curbing the drug trade.

Pakistan, Washington's closest regional ally before the collapse of the Soviet Union, has until June 7 to convince the United States not to blacklist it as a terrorist state, said Shaharyar Khan, the foreign secretary.

Many people in this mostly moderate Muslim nation wonder where the relationship went wrong.

As long as invading Soviet soldiers were in neighbouring Afghanistan, Washington and Islamabad were united in a desire to force the Russians out.

To do that, Washington spent billions of dollars arming Afghan insurgents, who used Pakistan as a springboard to conduct attacks in Afghanistan.

The rebels overran Kabul last year and tossed the communists from power. But they have been pounding each other with their huge stockpile of weapons ever since.

Thousands of Arabs came to Pakistan to join the U.S.-backed Afghan resistance, and many stayed on to fight for a more fundamentalist state. Several figures in the World Trade Centre bombing in New York in February — which killed six people and injured 1,000 — turned out to be Arab militants who had trained in Afghanistan.

Until 1989, when Moscow withdrew its estimated 115,000 troops in line with a U.N.-brokered accord, Pakistan could do no wrong in Washington's eyes, Mr. Khan said. Now it can't do anything right.

U.S. officials say relations went down hill in 1990, when they said Pakistan decided to build a nuclear device.

But Pakistan maintains nothing changed in 1990.

"We have not assembled a nuclear device," Mr. Khan said, although Pakistan's deposed Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif said Pakistan has the capability.

A U.S. law bans any U.S. aid or military equipment transfers to Pakistan unless the president first certifies that the nation does not have a nuclear weapon.

Pakistanis angrily point to their enemy neighbour, India, which is widely known to have a nuclear bomb. India isn't on Washington's hit list, and Islamabad says that's a double standard.

"We in Pakistan feel that we were friendly with the Americans for a long time...doing their dirty jobs as far as Afghanistan was concerned and now they are pulling our tail and doing nothing to India," said Prime Minister Balakh Sher Mazari.

In September 1990, former President Bush said Islamabad had the means to build a bomb, and U.S. humanitarian and military aid was suspended.

Some U.S. lawmakers want Pakistan declared a terrorist state in part because hundreds of foreign fundamentalist Muslim militants, many of them outlaws in their own countries, have taken refuge here.

Others want to impose sanctions on Pakistan because it's dragging its heels on curbing drug production and trafficking.

U.S. officials in Islamabad warn that declaring Pakistan a terrorist state could fuel an Islamic revolution. It could also eliminate whatever influence Washington retains in Islamabad.

"It will be the militant Muslims who take over this country. They will radicalise...129 million people by a foolish act like this," Narcotics Minister Sardar Assef Ali said, referring to proposed sanctions.

Declaring Pakistan a terrorist state hinges on proving whether Pakistan supports Muslim militants in India's troubled state of Kashmir and Sikh separatists in India's state of Punjab.

India also is trying to link Pakistan to the deadly bombings in Bombay earlier this year that killed at least 300 people.

Pakistan denies such Indian allegations, but U.S. officials say satellite photos show weapons traffic across the two nations' border.

The organisers described it as the biggest open debate about the 1,000-year-old institution since Britain's brief spell as a republic under Oliver Cromwell in the 17th century.

A more avowedly royalist member of the panel, Sunday Telegraph Editor Charles Moore, Author Andrew Morton, whose book about Princess Diana last year set tongues wagging about her rocky marriage to heir to the throne Prince Charles, told a seminar he welcomed the way the debate had passed from the royals' bedroom behaviour to their constitutional role.

"Because the monarchy exists people don't come out so much to defend it," said Don Foreman, general secretary of the league in Britain, who took careful notes about the republican case.

"But majorities are always silent aren't they?" he said.

The initiator and supervisor of the "psychodramatic" sketches is clinical psychologist Vesna Masharqqa. The stories, she says, were created in an "extraordinary and interesting way to assist in the treatment of individual problems or as an overall group therapy."

The first step is that in which children express their feelings (fears, nightmares, bad treatment, the theft of a pencil). "We look at their feelings seriously with respect. No problem is small enough to be dismissed," says Mrs. Masharqa. "Then we find a way to look at the problems in a different light, with a different emotional attitude. We reverse the feelings, when needed," she adds.

This whole situation makes the child feel respected and accepted. He has now a place in the group and is made responsible for himself and the others.

The benefit of creative drama when compared to real acting, she says, is that the child is independent. "He only depends on himself; he lives the character according to his psychological and emotional level."

Apparently, she adds, "the effects go beyond my intended purpose. Children rehearse alone in the schoolyard during breaks or they meet at home. They became friends, they discovered a new respect for each other and a sense of belonging to their school."

At a time when the whole educational system is being reevaluated, when stress is laid on children's capability to think and express themselves freely, after years of "guided" thinking, drama as a learning medium seems to be of real help in the education process.

ECONOMIC NEWS IN BRIEF

"The enumeration of these sins is a caution not against privatisation, but against privatising within the wrong framework and without a human development purpose in mind," Mr. Haq said.

Cambodians vote in large numbers despite Khmer Rouge threats

PHNOM PENH (AP) — Large numbers of Cambodians hungry for democracy pushed their way into polling stations Sunday for their first multiparty election in two decades.

More than 10,000 U.N. troops guarded against Khmer Rouge guerrillas opposing the election.

In southern Kampot province, a shell fired by the Khmer Rouge crashed near three polling stations. Then 100 guerrillas stormed one of the stations and held several U.N. policemen and Cambodian electoral workers for an hour before releasing them unharmed, a U.N. official said.

U.N. officials shut three stations as a precaution, said the official, who demanded anonymity.

Khmer Rouge activities in a few other provinces caused some disruptions of voting, "but nothing very serious," said the U.N. peacekeeping mission chief, Yasushi Akashi. "Throughout the country, the (voter) turnout has been very, very gratifying," he said.

The polls opened at 8 a.m. (0100 GMT) and closed at 4 p.m. (0900 GMT). The U.N.-organised election ends Friday.

In several areas of the country, people voted within kilometres of falling shells. Even in the tense northwest province of Siem Reap, where many people had said they were too scared of the Khmer Rouge to vote, turnout was higher than expected. In many areas, the eagerness could hardly be controlled.

In Kompong Cham province, just northeast of Phnom Penh, people jammed the main town's three polling stations despite early monsoon rains and the many Khmer Rouge in the province. Some came hours before the polls opened.

"It doesn't ease up. They keep pushing the door," said an international elections monitor, Elaine Douglas-Noel of Jamaica. "We had to post a police officer to hold them back. This is how much they want democracy."

Despite rains in Phnom Penh too, crowds shoved at the gates of the Olympic Stadium to enter the city's main voting station as peacekeepers scrambled to keep order.

"I had to come to vote because this is the first time in my life I am choosing a leader to represent Cambodia," said Cheng Ongeng, 63.

Voters said they didn't fear the Khmer Rouge because of the presence of U.N. troops.

"The Khmer Rouge have failed today," said the U.S. mission chief, Charles Twining. "This leaves the Khmer Rouge in the forest and I hope they like it there. I'm absolutely convinced that technically, this is being conducted in a manner that is free and fair."

It is the first multiparty election since the 1972 voting under a U.S.-backed government. For the past two decades, Cambodians have known only civil war and bloody revolution.

U.N. troops with rifles and flak jackets have been deployed at the some 1,500 polling sites nationwide. They frisked voters for weapons and checked their bags with metal detectors as they entered the sites.

Of the 20 parties, the ruling, communist-style Cambodian People's Party and the pro-West Royalist Party (FUNCINPEC) are expected to take the most votes. The election is for a 120-

Rouge guerrillas launched a series of attacks apparently intended to scare off voters. They also threatened to kill those who voted. The government has been linked to dozens of political killings, especially directed against FUNCINPEC, and to widespread intimidation of voters.

U.N. officials in Kompong Cham chased away government agents who loitered outside a polling station Sunday, apparently pressuring people to vote for the government.

FUNCINPEC leader Prince Norodom Ranariddh said his father, national reconciliation leader Prince Norodom Sihanouk, would talk with the Khmer Rouge after the election.

During the campaign, Khmer Rouge guerrillas launched a series of attacks apparently intended to scare off voters. They also threatened to kill those who voted. The government has been linked to dozens of political killings, especially directed against FUNCINPEC, and to widespread intimidation of voters.

Hopes for peace rose after Prince Sihanouk, the only leader accepted by all Cambodian factions including the Khmer Rouge, returned home Saturday from several weeks abroad to support the elections.

The Khmer Rouge forced radical communism on the nation during its 1975-79 rule, killing perhaps 1.5 million people by slave labour and executions. A Vietnamese invasion ousted the group, which then fought the pro-Hanoi government.

Fighting between the government and the Khmer Rouge, mostly small-scale and limited to certain areas, has continued throughout the U.N. mission's 14-month presence.

2-horse race for top Cannes prize — critics

CANNES, France (R) — To believe the critics, this year's Cannes Film Festival competition is a two-horse race. But they have often been wrong before.

Jane Campion's The Piano and Chen Kaige's Red will be the two main contenders for the top prize. The Piano has won by far the warmest praise in a selection of 23 competitive films widely regarded as below Cannes' usual standards.

All will be revealed Monday night when the 16-member jury headed by French director Louis Malle emerges from its cocoon of strict secrecy to announce the Golden Palm winners.

The Piano is a passionate love story set in the wilds of 19th century New Zealand, was so much the advance favourite that festival went to the Golden Palm on arrival at the airport.

All that changed when critics saw Red, a three-hour Chinese epic about actors at the Peking Opera during the most turbulent events of the 20th century.

"Chen Kaige has bitten off an epic mouthful of modern Chinese history, skillfully interwoven with the splendid stylised Peking Opera story of a king and his concubine," wrote the trade magazine Movieworld.

"All ingredients masterfully blended into a delicious bowl of chop suey."

Both films represent a challenge to the long-standing dominance of U.S. and European cinema, both at Cannes and around the world.

No film from China or Australia (The Piano is a co-production) has ever won the Golden Palm.

The last film from outside the United States and Europe to clinch the top prize was The Ballad of Narayana from Japan 10 years ago.

This year's competition includes three Australian films, one Chinese and one Taiwanese — suggesting Cannes is catching up with enthusiasm at other festivals for Asian and Australasian productions.

The Americans disappointed Cannes this year before the festival had even started — Robert Altman, Martin Scorsese and Jonathan Demme all held back their latest films for the Venice Festival in September.

And the most keenly awaited European film, Wim Wenders' Faraway, So Close, was panned by critics as self-indulgent and confused.

Cannes juries are notoriously unpredictable — last year's winner, Bill August's The Best Intentions, was far from being the critics' favourite.

Moreover, Red has a track record of non-conformism — in 1988 he resigned from the jury and helped close the festival down at the height of a student and worker uprising in France.

Outside tips for the top prize include British director Ken Loach's Raining Stones and Frenchman Alain Cavalier's Librairie, an experimental film dealing with political repression without dialogue or incidental music.

Mandela: ANC to unilaterally announce election date

NEWCASTLE, South Africa (R) — Nelson Mandela said Sunday his African National Congress (ANC) would unilaterally announce by the end of the month a date for South Africa's first democratic elections.

"We have decided to announce before the end of May an exact day for elections before April next year," Mr. Mandela told a 3,000-strong rally in a mainly Indian South African district in this Natal mining town.

Multi-party negotiators, including those of the ANC and the government, are widely reported to have privately decided on an election date and had been expected to jointly announce it at a meeting of their leaders near Johannesburg on June 2.

The announcement was Mr. Mandela's second surprise statement during a two-day tour of volatile Natal province. On Saturday he raised the government's hackles by suggesting 14-year-olds should have the vote.

The setting of an election date by the end of May is the main aim of a month of mass action orchestrated by the ANC and its allies which has spilled over into violence. At least 20 people have been killed.

The planned June 2 announcement was considered a compromise to meet the demands of ANC supporters and the government's desire not to appear to be forced into making an early announcement.

Mr. Mandela's call for the voting age to be lowered from 18 was the first serious suggestion of its kind by the ANC and appeared aimed at appealing to militant black youths angered at the slow pace of democracy talks.

"They say a person under the age of 18 can't think correctly and make wise choices. We reject that and demand the voting age should be from 14," Mr. Mandela said.

The ANC leader said Sunday the previous day's battles between ANC supporters and those of the rival Inkatha Freedom Party (IFP) in a township near Johannesburg which left up to 15 people dead and at least 60 wounded were "in the interests of the (ruling) National Party."

"The solution to the problems of South Africa is to have a free and fair election... to overthrow the present government by peaceful means. They are unfit to govern," Mr. Mandela said.

"This violence is in the interests of the National Party. The government retains the primary responsibility for the violence," he said.

Law and Order Minister Herskovic urged the ANC and the IFP to redouble their efforts to control their followers.

"I again reiterate the government's call for an urgent moratorium on all mass action. Organisations such as the ANC and IFP will simply have to do far more to address the culture of intolerance between their supporters," Mr. Kriel said in a statement.

Addressing a few whites in a crowd of supporters earlier Sunday, the ANC leader said South Africa's white community had skills needed to help build a new democratic country.

"One of the appeals we make is that (the whites) do not leave South Africa. They must stay with us," he said.

Crisis puts Ukraine reforms, stability in doubt

KIEV (R) — A constitutional crisis in Ukraine has left the former Soviet republic riven by political infighting and put in doubt both the course of reforms and social stability.

As in neighbouring Russia, the conflict pits a liberal government against a conservative parliament dominated by holdovers from the Soviet era.

But the battle lines are less clearly drawn than in Moscow. Prime Minister Leonid Kuchma, Ukraine's biggest proponent of market policies, tendered his resignation last week after a three-day barrage of criticism from deputies unwilling to renew his special powers to press on with reforms.

He was also infuriated by an attempt by President Leonid Kravchuk, a former Communist ideology chief who led the country to independence, to take over sole control of the government.

Parliament, which had blocked the prime minister's policies for months, now backed him in earnest, rejected his resignation and forced a compromise.

It granted limited extended powers to an increasingly unpopular president working with an unwilling parliament.

Everyone lost in an undignified spectacle.

The worst losers could well be ordinary Ukrainians, reeling from the effects of huge price increases and a plummeting currency and disenchanted with the actions of all their leaders.

"The situation in Ukraine is very much a stalemate," said Volodymyr Fylypshchuk, a top deputy and economist.

"The government did not get its extended powers. The president was unable to take power into his own hands. And parliament is purely and simply unable to undertake reforms."

"We must avoid a situation like Russia's. The conclusion is obvious. The country can be saved only by joint effort."

Personal animosities among the three principal actors — Mr. Kravchuk, Mr. Kuchma and parliamentary Chairman Ivan Plyushch — blur distinctions between pro and anti-market forces.

Mr. Kuchma took over the government last October with a mandate to make for a year of inaction which had left post-Communist Ukraine well behind its powerful northern neighbour in ending seven decades of command economies.

The premier, former head of the world's largest missile factory, enraged conservatives by cutting subsidies to bloated industry and farming and pressing on with privatisation.

His record has been mixed, with inflation reduced but production continuing to fall. Credits issued by the National Bank with parliament's authorisation hindered his policies.

Mr. Kravchuk is a skilled operator, renowned for his ability to seek and achieve compromise in the uncertain post-Soviet world.

China, U.K. to have more talks on Hong Kong

PEKING (R) — China and Britain ended their third round of talks about political reform in Hong Kong Sunday with no sign of any agreement other than to keep talking.

A joint statement issued after three days of negotiations said merely that a fourth round of talks would be held on May 28 and 29.

The British negotiator, Sir Robin McLaren, told reporters the atmosphere was good. But he would not be drawn on the content of the discussions other than to say: "The work we're doing is quite complicated work."

Mr. McLaren, Britain's ambassador to China, faces a daunting task of trying to bridge a chasm of mistrust and anger that has divided London and Peking since Hong Kong Governor Chris Patten unveiled plans late last year to widen the franchise in the colony before it returns to China in 1997.

Peking is furious at what it sees as an attempt to perpetuate British control after the handover and maintains that Mr. Patten's plans contravene previous Sino-British agreements.

However, there is new optimism in Hong Kong that Peking is keen to adopt a business-as-usual approach to the territory, even as the political crisis drags on.

Hong Kong stocks closed at a record high Friday after Peking endorsed three business contracts valid past 1997, allowing a long-delayed cable television project to go ahead. China had earlier threatened to scrap after 1997 any contracts signed by the colonial government without its approval.

Sino-British relations thawed slightly with the resumption of the talks on Hong Kong's democratic future last month.

Paris (R) — Former Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev said in an interview published Sunday he considered himself a statesman in waiting and was ready to play a political role in Russia or in the Yugoslav conflict if asked.

Mr. Gorbachev, who is to visit the Netherlands and France this week, told Le Journal De Dimanche: "The Democrats who began the (Soviet) reforms in 1985 could come together again on condition that society asks them to return."

"If society reaches the conclusion that Gorbachev should play a different role from now, then I will consider it. But if there is not this demand, this signal from society, I don't want to impose myself," he said.

Asked if he considered himself in reserve like General Charles De Gaulle before he took power in 1958, the former Communist leader said: "Yes, let us say yes, absolutely."

"I am still doing and I could do lots of things," he said.

Mr. Gorbachev, who now heads a think-tank in Moscow, called for an international summit to create a new body to resolve the conflict in former Yugoslavia. Asked if he saw a role for

World dithers over Bosnia — Sarajevo

SARAJEVO (R) — Bosnia's Muslims have poured scorn on the West's new strategy in their stricken republic, saying the world dithers while the slaughter continues unabated.

Sarajevo's Muslim-controlled radio reported that Serb fire rained from dawn on the town of Magaj in northern Bosnia Sunday, causing many civilian casualties.

The earth under this completely devastated town is shaking with explosions," the radio said.

In the Bosnian capital, a government statement said "impossible procrastination and the complete ineffectiveness of the entire international community," had encouraged Bosnia's Serbs to press on with attacks in defiance of U.N. resolutions.

After Washington and its allies forged what they called a joint strategy to contain the war and repair the rift in Western ranks over intervention, Sarajevo and surrounding areas experienced one of the bloodiest days for weeks Saturday.

Up to 15 people were killed and more than 100 wounded in seven hours of mortar and artillery attacks by both sides.

U.N. peacekeepers said it was not clear who started the carnage, which marked the first anniversary of Bosnia-Herzegovina's admission into the United Nations.

"It was a sad testimony yesterday to the situation we face here. We've seen both sides... shelling civilian targets," U.N. Protection Force spokesman Commander Barry Frewer said.

Saturday's government statement called for international military action to halt the Bosnian Serb army, now in control of 70 per cent of Bosnia after 13 months of war, and for the lifting of a U.N. arms embargo for Muslim-led forces.

That formula, championed only days ago by U.S. President Bill Clinton, seemed more remote than ever after the United States, Russia, France, Britain and Spain agreed on a common strategy intended to contain the war and promote peace efforts.

Their foreign ministers announced measures including the offer of U.S. air power to protect U.N. forces in "safe areas" for Muslims if U.N. soldiers came under attack and to ensure that arms supplies were cut off to Bosnia's Serbs and Croats.

They stopped short of measures like stationing U.S. forces in Bosnia or trying to impose on Bosnian Serbs the U.N.-backed peace plan which they have overwhelmingly rejected.

Mr. Clinton said the new strategy, expected to be codified in Security Council resolutions, would limit "the possibility of a quagmire" and help confine for conflict to Bosnia.

"We're still pushing for a political settlement that has some reasonable lead for the Bosnian Muslims," Mr. Clinton said.

But he stressed that the United States was "clearly not going to get involved there, either unilaterally or multilaterally... on one of the sides... in a civil war."

The initiative calls for the rigorous enforcement of existing U.N. sanctions against rump Yugoslavia.

It also offers to deploy monitors on Yugoslavia's borders with Bosnia to ensure that Belgrade was meeting its pledge this month to cut off strategic supplies to the Serbs.

Yugoslav President Dobrica Cosic last week rejected the idea of monitors, a position which was confirmed by a senior Yugoslav official Sunday.

"They (the international community) do not respect what Yugoslavia has done. There is no respect for Yugoslav efforts nor for our national dignity," the official told Reuters.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic said Sunday he would comply with a plan to set up U.S.-protected safe areas to protect Muslims in Bosnia.

"Yes I will certainly," Mr. Karadzic told a British Broadcasting Corporation radio interviewer when asked whether he would accept the joint action plan agreed by the Western allies.

IRA bomb blows up Belfast hotel

BELFAST (R) — The Irish Republican Army (IRA), stepping up its bombing campaign after Northern Ireland council elections, blew up a car bomb outside a Belfast hotel Saturday night.

It was the third car bomb attack in the British province in three days by the IRA which is battling to oust Britain from Northern Ireland.

Police said that in the latest attack a car was left outside the Drumken Hotel in Belfast.

Asked if the IRA had issued any warning, a police spokesman said: "A telephone warning was received by staff about 30 minutes before. Several people were treated for shock after the blast. Damage to the hotel was extensive."

This attack followed two bnges 1,000 pound (456 kilos) car bomb attack in Belfast and Portadown.

Thursday's Belfast bomb, which went off just as counting began after Northern Ireland's local council elections, injured 20 people and damaged some of Belfast's most famous historic buildings including the Grand Opera House.

On Saturday, another 1,000 pound bomb tore a hole through the centre of Portadown, injuring two policemen and four civilians.

Sinn Fein, political wing of the IRA, made the biggest gain of any party in the local elections. Traditionally, the IRA tones down its guerrilla campaign during elections to allow its political wing to take centre stage.

Republican sources have also warned that the IRA may now put back in top gear its bombing campaign on the British mainland.

Gorbachev sees possible political return

PARIS (R) — Former Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev said in an interview published Sunday he considered himself a statesman in waiting and was ready to play a political role in Russia or in the Yugoslav conflict if asked.

Mr. Gorbachev, who is to visit the Netherlands and France this week, told Le Journal De Dimanche: "The Democrats who began the (Soviet) reforms in 1985 could come together again on condition that society asks them to return."

"If society reaches the conclusion that Gorbachev should play a different role from now, then I will consider it. But if there is not this demand, this signal from society, I don't want to impose myself," he said.

Asked if he considered himself in reserve like General Charles De Gaulle before he took power in 1958, the former Communist leader said: "Yes, let us say yes, absolutely."

"I am still doing and I could do lots of things," he said.

Mr. Gorbachev, who now heads a think-tank in Moscow, called for an international summit to create a new body to resolve the conflict in former Yugoslavia. Asked if he saw a role for himself in peacemaking in the conflict, he said: "If the decision is taken to create a powerful political and intellectual group to prepare such a solution, I am ready to participate at every working level."

He said he would discuss the idea with French President Francois Mitterrand when they meet next Saturday.

But Mr. Gorbachev stressed that he supported the action of international mediators Lord Owen and Cyrus Vance and had no intention of undermining their work.

The former president, who resigned upon the breakup of the Soviet Union in December 1991, said the situation between Russian President Boris Yeltsin and parliament had reached deadlock and there should be fresh elections for both the presidency and the legislature.

Criticising Mr. Yeltsin, he said the policy pursued since January 1992 was one of "adventurism" full of demagogic promises which could not be kept and which had disappointed the people.

Meanwhile the Russian government and its opponents are stepping up their campaigns ahead of a crucial constitutional meeting on June 5 which could go some way to resolving the country's power crisis.

President Yeltsin wants the conference to adopt a draft constitution which would set up a French-style presidential republic giving him sweeping powers over the government and a new bicameral parliament.

Key Yeltsin aide Sergei Shakhrai told a news conference Saturday that he had already talked to half Russia's 88 regions and republics and most in principle supported Mr. Yeltsin's draft. ITAR-TASS News Agency reported.

"Now I can say that nobody is denying the necessity of a new constitution for Russia," he said. His comments may help dispel the threat of a damaging boycott by the increasingly fractious regions and republics, who are demanding more sovereignty over their own affairs.

"All regions I've dealt with so far... are ready to send their representatives to the assembly," Mr. Shakhrai said.

The new constitution would have to tackle the problem of giving the various territories and regions the same level of autonomy enjoyed by the country's 21 ethnic republics, he said.

Conservative groups flatly oppose Mr. Yeltsin's draft, which they say paves the way for dictatorship, and claim to have mustered enough signatures to force a nationwide referendum on bringing back a "Soviet Socialist constitution."

Hardliners said Friday they would hold their own constitutional conference at the same time and would also invite regional spokesmen to Moscow to draw up a separate draft.

Interfax News Agency said the headline National Salvation Front had warned it would picket the city centre and state buildings on June 5 to 12 to protect the current constitution, a much-amended version of the former Soviet-era basic law.

Parliamentary Chairman and Yeltsin arch-rival Ruslan Khasbulatov, who accuses the Russian leader of acting illegally, has been put on the defensive by the partial defection of some key parliamentary allies.

One of his deputies, Nikolai Ryabov, welcomes the idea of the meeting, apparently influenced by the support shown for Mr. Yeltsin in an April 25 national referendum.

Car thieves caught by policeman on bicycle

CAPE TOWN (R) — A Cape Town policeman on a bicycle chased a gang of car thieves for four kilometres. He blazed away with his gun as he pumped the pedals and the stolen car veered off the road. He arrested two men, police said.

Lawsuit seeks new probe of Presley's death

NASHVILLE, Tennessee (R) — A lawsuit has been filed by Memphis officials seeking a new independent probe into the cause of rock 'n' roll legend Elvis Presley's death in 1977. The suit was filed in Davidson County Chancery Court in Nashville Friday by the Shelby County Commission, which is the governing board for the county. Assistant Shelby County Attorney Bill Gibbons, who filed the suit, said he hopes the legal action will prompt Tennessee state officials to start a new investigation. Mr. Gibbons said the state's registrar of vital records "is obligated to investigate irregularities in death certificates." But according to the suit, Registrar Paula Taylor "has made no effort to even study the issue comprehensively" since the county commission voted in April 1991 to ask for an investigation. In that resolution, the commission cited the book, The Death Of Elvis: What Really Happened, quoting doctors who said Presley died from a drug overdose. Presley's sudden death at his home in Memphis at the age of 42 was caused by heart disease, according to chief state medical examiner Dr. Charles Hayman. But Mr. Gibbons said in the lawsuit that the state has consistently refused to open the autopsy report and to carry out a "thorough, objective inspection of all medical records."

U.K. police keep severed ear on ice

SOUTHAMPTON, England (R) — Police were keeping a severed ear in a refrigerator at their station in Southampton to await its owner, who had it bitten off in a pub brawl. "This man lost a substantial part of his ear and needs urgent medical attention," detective inspector Ray Burt said after the fight. "We would also like to talk to him because this was an extremely vicious attack."

Prince Charles hails bricks in hotel toilets

LONDON (R) — Britain's Prince Charles wants luxury hotels to help conserve natural resources with practical measures such as bricks in toilet cisterns to save water. The future king, long a promoter of environmental issues, told an international hoteliers conference in London that environment-friendly schemes were not five-star business. But, he said, the pro-environment campaign relied on the "very unglamorous business of reducing environmental impacts step by step, pound by pound, flush by flush," he praised the Hilton Hotel in London for cutting back on water used to flush toilets by simply "banging a brick into each and every cistern." The conference, organised to launch a guide of practical measures drawn up by 11 leading hotels such as the Forte, Hilton and Intercontinental chains, also heard British greco campaigner Jonathan Porritt condemn daily changing of towels in hotels. "It is extraordinary to think that people are paying perhaps £200 (£310) a night are so dirty that they need a new towel every night," he said. Guests should also turn off lights at night, he added.

Britain studies 'floating jails' to ease crowding

LONDON (R) — Britain is considering using ships as jails as a way to reduce prison overcrowding, officials said. Mooring ships off the coast to accommodate low security prisoners was one of a series of options under consideration, a spokesman from the Home Office (Interior Ministry) said. According to the Independent on Sunday, two vessels moored off Cumbria in northwest England could accommodate 800 prisoners — people nearing the end of their sentence or prisoners awaiting trial. The Home Office said officials had studied similar floating detention units in New York Harbour. A home office spokesman told the paper prisoners were not now critically overcrowded. In mid-May, the prison population was 43,501, with 2,669 places still empty. In recent months Britain's Conservative government has come under fire for experimenting with a partial privatisation of the prison service.

Bowe stops Ferguson in second round

WASHINGTON (R) — Riddick Bowe knocked out Jesse Ferguson at the end of the second round in the opening seconds of the scheduled 12-round fight. Bowe, 25, easily landed his jab through to Ferguson's head, which was an immobile target for the shorter fighter.

Bowe, now 34-0, dropped the 36-year-old Ferguson with a left hook in the first round. The longer rolled over, but somehow managed to get up and as referee Larry Hazzard counted to 10, the bell sounded to end the round.

Ferguson, a 40-1 underdog, wobbled to his feet, where there was no stool waiting for him. He was forced to stand to collect himself while cornermen scrambled for a stool.

Ferguson came out in the second round and stayed directly in front of Bowe, who simply landed six consecutive shots, dropping the underdog, he called him off 17 seconds into the second round.

Bowe's second title defence and his short fight against a hopelessly overmatched opponent.

His first defence last February, Bowe stopped Axel Dokes at two minutes and 19 seconds of the first round.

Ferguson was on the undercard of that fight and was a highly-regarded contender Ray Mercer to the title shot.

Bowe, now 19-10, weighed 224 pounds (101 kg). He was 20 pounds (9 kg) lighter and three inches shorter than the 6-foot, five-inch (1.95 metre) champion.

"This is what it's like to be a bad man," Bowe said after the fight, "which drew a sparse crowd of about 9,000 in the 30,000-seat setup for the bout at RFK Stadium."

It was the first time a world heavyweight championship fight had been held in the nation's capital since Joe Louis defeated Buddy Baer at Griffith Stadium May 23, 1941 — almost 52 years ago to the day.

"If I put my mind to it, I can be in any shape I want. I tested my left uppercut. My uppercut is lethal. Jesse has never been rocked like this," Bowe said.

"I'm not ray mercer. I was focused and determined. This is how you're supposed to take out your opponent when you're a champion."

Bowe won all three major titles — WBA, World Boxing Council (WBC) and the International Boxing Federation titles — by winning a unanimous decision over Evander Holyfield after 12 rounds last November.

Bowe, who earned about $7 million Saturday, surrendered his WBC title rather than make his first defence against Briton Lennox Lewis, who was then awarded the title.

The IBF did not sanction Saturday's fight because the organisation had not ranked Ferguson, who earned $500,000 for getting pumelled by Bowe.

Ferguson's wife, Cynthia, had told him about six months ago that he should think about retiring after Saturday's fight.

It appears her advice was sound.

Sonics to meet Suns

SEATTLE (R) — It came down to overtime in the seventh and deciding game, but the Seattle SuperSonics got the job done at crunch time Saturday to beat the Houston Rockets and advance to the Western Conference finals.

Sam Perkins hit a feadeaway jumper with 28.5 seconds left in overtime to give Seattle a three-point lead and Shawn Kemp converted two free throws with less than one second remaining as the SuperSonics held off the Rockets 103-100.

A desperation three-point attempt by Houston centre Hakeem Olajuwon at the buzzer failed to hit the rim, ending only the fourth playoff series in National Basketball Association history in which a seventh game was decided in overtime.

Seattle will play the Phoenix Suns in the best-of-seven Western Conference finals beginning Monday in Phoenix. The Suns eliminated the San Antonio Spurs in six games.

Meanwhile the much-anticipated Eastern Conference finals between the two-time defending NBA champion Chicago Bulls and the New York Knicks begins in New York.

"We held our composure, played good basketball, made good decisions in the second half and made the shots when we needed them," Kemp said after Seattle earned its first trip to the Conference finals since 1987.

Seattle's Ricky Pierce, who led all scorers with 25 points, hit a 10-foot baseline jumper with 24 seconds left in regulation to tie the game at 93-93. Houston had a chance to win, but Kenny Smith missed a corner jumper at the buzzer to force overtime.

Olajuwon, led the Rockets with 23 points and 17 rebounds. Kemp, who finished with 18 points and 11 rebounds, sank both free throws with eight-tenths of a second left to seal the Seattle victory.

Perkins hit all eight of his field goal attempts after the half and finished with 23 points, including 18 in the second half and overtime.

"It was a trying series," Perkins said afterwards. "And we still got a long way to go."

World Cup qualifying matches Jordan, Iraq clash today

By Aileen Bannayan
Special to the Jordan Times

JORDAN AND IRAQ face-off Monday afternoon in a crucial and deciding match of the Asian Group A World Cup qualifying matches at Al Hassan stadium in Irbid.

The Iraqi team will be playing the first of their matches. They had a practice session but their coach refused to give any statements or announce the lineup of players.

Hosts, Jordan, will be aiming for a win after conceding a 1-1 draw with group underdogs, Yemen, in the opening match Saturday.

The Kingdom's team had last played their Iraqi opponents last August in the Jordan International Soccer tournament in which Jordan upset Iraq 2-0 to win the tournament.

Jordanian coach Alexander Maximov is expected to change the lineup of players as mohammad Al Khazali has a red card booking, and some strikers did not live up to expectations and seemed to lack fitness — a fact Yemen took advantage of to score the equalising goal in the final two minutes.

In a post-match press conference, Maximov admitted that opening goal in the 37th minute.

While Pakistan rarely approached China's goal and content ending the first half 1-0.

The Pakistani team could not hold on much longer as their defence faltered in the second half, allowing China to freely score four more goals. Gao Hongbo scored a hat-trick, netting in his team's second and third goals in the 55th and 59th minutes. Teammate Zhai Biao scored the fourth goal in the 72nd minute, and Gao came back to score the final goal in the 83rd minute. A sixth goal by China was ruled offside by Referee Ammar Ammar of Lebanon.

In Monday's matches Jordan play Iraq at 4 p.m., while Yemen play Pakistan at 8.30 p.m.

Ivanisevic may be Europe's best hope in French Open

PARIS (R) — European hopes of ending the continent's bleakest spell in more than two decades at the French Open starting Monday may rest on the shoulders of the unpredictable Goran Ivanisevic of Croatia.

No European has won the men's singles since Sweden's Mats Wilander triumphed in 1988 and with American Jim Courier hot favourite for his third successive crown, it will take something special to stop the non-European trend.

The 21-year-old from Split is certainly something special and there are signs that he is beginning to put behind him the erratic excesses of youth to approach tennis maturity.

The only player to take a set off Courier last year at Roland Garros, Ivanisevic has become much more consistent of late and could be ready to make his best challenge yet.

Europe badly needs a winner after years in which it was perceived wisdom that the continent's plethora of clay court specialists virtually guaranteed success in Paris.

Of the 19 men's singles finals played from 1970 to 1988, European won 16, only Argentina's Guillermo Vilas breaking the monopoly in 1977.

The long-standing theory that Americans did not have the clay background to make the grade at the French was broken in 1989 when Michael Chang ended a 34-year spell without success.

But the American continent has now taken over. Andres Gomez of Ecuador winning in 1990 and Courier taking the last two titles.

Worse still for the Europeans, Petr Korda of the Czech Republic was the continent's only player to reach the final in the last three years — and he took only eight games off Courier in last year's showpiece.

Ivanisevic, losing finalist at Wimbledon last year to American Andre Agassi, showed a return to form after early season injury problems when he reached the final of the Italian Open in Rome this month — though he was crushed in straight sets by Courier.

The tall, big-hitting Croat believes he has the weapons to do well in Paris. "People think I'm just machine for making aces but I work very hard at all my strokes," he said.

"I had a chance to win Roland Garros last year because I was up in the fourth set against Courier in the quarter-final and he was getting nervous. If I'd won that, we would have gone to a fifth and he's not always at his best in fifth sets."

"When I concentrate, I can play very well on clay. I can stay on the baseline like the specialists and run all day. I may be tall but I move around the court well."

As an 18-year-old Ivanisevic caused an upset in Paris by dismissing German Boris Becker in the first round before going out eventually in the quarter-finals to Austrian Thomas Muster.

Now managed by the German's mentor Ion Tiriac and coached by Becker's former trainer Bon Brett, Ivanisevic has also acquired a regular female travelling companion in girlfriend Daniela, a move he said had stabilised him a lot.

A stress fracture of the foot and an Achilles tendon problem held him back earlier this year but he is getting back to his best and said he felt fresh for the two-week tournament ahead.

"I don't fear anyone when I'm playing well and I feel fine," he said. "I've already proved that."

Ivanisevic apart, Europe's best chances may come from the form players of the clay season, Spain's Bruguera or 18-year-old Ukrainian Andrei Medvedev. But Bruguera has regularly flopped in Paris at the past and it may be too early for the rapidly improving Medvedev.

Stefan Edberg of Sweden, losing finalist in 1989, cannot be ruled out even though he is not too happy on clay but Courier may feel his stiffest challenge could still be from outside Europe — in the shape of fellow-American Pete Sampras, the man who deposed him as world number one earlier this year.

The women's tournament looks wide open after the withdrawal of reigning champion Monica Seles of Yugoslavia following the stabbing incident in Hamburg last month.

Two former champions Steffi Graf of Germany and Spain's Arantxa Sanchez Vicario start as favourites but Gabriela Sabatini of Argentina and a second Spaniard, Conchita Martinez, have title ambitions too.

Last gasp PSG winner leaves Marseille waiting

PARIS (R) — A last gasp winner St Germain substitute cois Calderaro left European finalists Marseille waiting to a record fifth consecutive League crown Saturday.

Idler scrambled home a Le Guen corner in the 90th to give the Parisians a 1-0 over Nantes at the Parc des Seines to keep the title race open.

Marseille had moved six points of PSG and Monaco Thursday to a 1-0 win in Valenciennes, with only two games to the title had their two rivals to win.

snaco obliged, going down Metz to a Nicolas Huysman and the Parisians looked as if they would never break down a determined defensive performance by a Nantes side seeking a UEFA Cup berth.

But Calderaro's goal left the championship alive until next week, at least, when Paris St Germain visit Marseille, three days after their European Cup final date with AC Milan in Munich.

PSG must win at the Stade Velodrome to stay in the race for the final match of the season June 2.

The late goal cost Nantes the chance of going above Bordeaux into fourth place, a place which would qualify them for the UEFA Cup.

Bordeaux lost 2-0 in Toulouse, whose striker Anthony Bancarel scored twice to guarantee the home side a place in the first division next season.

But Nimes are now certain to go down after suffering the indignity of a 5-2 defeat in Auxerre, whose forward Lilian Laslandes scored a hat-trick.

Toulon are almost certain to accompany them after losing 2-1 at home to Le Havre. Ivory Coast striker Joel Tchihi scored a late winner.

Caen forward Xavier Gravelaine, who had suffered a lean spell in the last two months, struck twice to give his team a 2-0 win over Sochaux and take his tally to 20 for the season, one fewer than leading scorer Alen Boksic of Marseille, who netted Thursday's winner in Valenciennes.

Voeller to play in Japan: Marseille's German striker Rudi Voeller will sign a contract with Japanese soccer club Yomiuri Nippon FC in June, news reports said Sunday.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠10863 ♠A873 ♣K ♠J532
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♠ Dbl ?
What action do you take?
A.—You certainly don't want to bid a bad suit, so we wouldn't fault you if you chose to pass. However, we don't like twiddling our thumbs idly when we hold sound responding values, so our choice would be one no trump. If the opponents compete further, at least they will have to do so at a level higher than they like.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q652 ♠643 ♠J92 ♠A83
The bidding has proceeded:
West North East South
1 ♠ Dbl 1 ♠ ?
What action do you take?
A.—You don't have much, but we hate passing when we have a smattering of values and a possible 4-4 fit in a major. Our choice would be one spade. It must be safer to contest the auction now than to try to back in later.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ76 ♠AJ83 ♠7 ♠AK92
The bidding has proceeded:
East South West North
1 ♠ Dbl Pass 1 ♠ ?
What action do you take?
A.—You have a very fine hand in support of spades, worth the equivalent of 21 points. Bear in mind, however, that you have forced partner to bid on what could be a yarrow-borough, jump to three spades. That invites partner to go in game on the smell of an oil rag.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ652 ♠KJ63 ♠Void ♠J765
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♠ Pass 1 ♠ ?
What action do you take?
A.—Partner's correction to your first bid suit doesn't even guarantee a three-card support. If, indeed, North has taken a preference on a doubleton, the hand is at least a partial misfit, which suggests that you are as high as you want to be. Pass.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠94 ♠AQJ63 ♠A105 ♠Q98
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♠ Pass 1 ♠ ?
What action do you take?
A.—Whether you play four or five-card majors is irrelevant. You have a balanced hand with stoppers in the unbid suits and no particular support for partner. You can describe this holding precisely by opting for one no trump as your rebid. Anything else distorts your holding.

Attas reinstated as Yemeni premier

SANAA (Agencies) — The presidential council reinstated Haider Abu Bakr Al Attas as prime minister Sunday and asked him to form a national coalition cabinet to cement Yemen's infant multi-party democracy.

Mr. Attas, 54, had resigned after the April 27 parliamentary vote, the first multi-party elections in the Arabian Peninsula which is dominated by monarchies and one-party rule.

The state media said that the five-man ruling council, led by Ali Abdullah Saleh, president of the pre-merger North Yemen, asked Mr. Attas to form the new cabinet and he immediately began consultations for this purpose.

Mr. Attas is a member of the Yemen Socialist Party (YSP), which ruled the formerly Marxist South Yemen before the merger in May 1990. He was president of South Yemen before the union.

The Socialists and Mr. Saleh's General People's Congress had run Yemen in a coalition after the union. With Mr. Saleh atop the ruling council and Mr. Attas prime minister, the two parties have consolidated their grip on the executive authority.

Together, the two parties have 179 seats in the 301-member parliament and have vowed to work within the house as a single bloc. Parliament earlier this month elected Sheikh Abdullah Hussan Al Amari, a co-founder of the pro-Saudi Arabian Islamic fundamentalist Al Islah party, as speaker.

The move was interpreted as an attempt to placate the fundamentalists at home and help mend fences with Saudi Arabia, Yemen's influential neighbour which reportedly viewed the parliamentary elections as a potential harbinger of political change in the conservative region.

A civil engineer by profession, Mr. Attas' previous three years as prime minister had been marred by political turmoil and economic hardships in the country of 14.5 million.

Unconfirmed reports said Mr. Saleh's party would retain 12 portfolios and both the Socialists and the Islamists would each have four members in the cabinet.

One portfolio would be offered, each to the Nasserites and the pro-Iraq Baath Party, the reports said.

Yemenis, divided for three centuries, are celebrating three years of unity that has brought unprecedented democracy but also economic hardship and political instability. Residents of Sanaa strolled through brightly lit streets Saturday night and flags fluttered on private homes as well as official buildings.

But on the eve of the anniversary, and less than a month after Yemen's first multi-party elections, President Saleh conceded that Yemenis had suffered during the three since unification.

"The great success of the election should not distance us from the suffering of our people during the transitional period because of the inefficiencies of the government's economic, administrative, social and security institutions," he said.

Newspaper prices go up

By a Staff Reporter

AMMAN — Prices of Jordan's newspapers, will increase to 150 fils from 100 as of Thursday to keep up with newly-imposed taxes on paper. The change in prices will affect the three daily Arabic newspapers as well as the Jordan Times but is not expected to affect weeklies which already charge a higher price for their copy.

The price hike came after fruitless efforts by the local newspapers to dissuade the government from imposing a 25 per cent tax on newspaper. The new tax, newspaper representatives told the government on several occasions, is not equalled anywhere else in the world where newspaper prices are intentionally kept down to make them accessible to all people.

However, since the government decision still stood after these efforts, publishers say, they have little choice but to increase the price of newspaper copies, especially since they had already increased advertisement costs earlier this year.

Al Ra'i, the largest circulating newspaper in Jordan, expected its expenses to increase by over half a million dinars a year with the tax increase.

"We hope that we will be able to compensate our readers for their added expense by improving the quality of news," Al Ra'i Editor-in-Chief Mahmood Al Kayad told the Jordan Times.

The new taxes on paper have been in effect since early January, but newspapers waited until the middle of the year before transferring the added expense to the readers.

More than 700,000 pilgrims already in S. Arabia

DUBAI (R) — More than 700,000 Muslims from around the world including 100,000 Iraqis have flocked to Saudi Arabia for the annual pilgrimage to Islam's holiest city.

Thousands more were arriving each day by air, land and sea for the pilgrimage to Mecca, birthplace of the Prophet Muhammad, Saudi press reports said. Every Muslim who can afford to is obliged to perform the pilgrimage once in a lifetime.

The Haj reaches its climax on May 30, ninth day of the holy month of Dhul-Hijja, when a million white-robed pilgrims gather at Mount Arafat, site of the Prophet's last sermon 14 centuries ago, and three monuments representing Satan are stoned.

The following day Muslims celebrate the start of 'Eid Al Adha, when sheep are slaughtered to commemorate God's test of Abraham.

The Saudi minister of pilgrimage affairs and endowments, Abdul Wahhab Abdul Wasie, said the kingdom expects the same number of pilgrims as last year when up to two million people, almost half of them Saudis, performed the Haj.

He said the number of pilgrims last year was 40 per cent higher than in 1991 when the Gulf war over Iraq's occupation of Kuwait led many airlines to cancel flights to Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Abdul Wahhab said in a newspaper interview Saturday that Saudi Arabia was taking all steps to ensure a trouble-free Haj. "The kingdom is sparing no money or effort to help pilgrims perform their pilgrimage in security and safety," he said.

Straining transport and other facilities with its vast numbers, the Haj has often been hit by accidents causing great loss of life. The worst of recent Mecca tragedies was a stampede during the 1990 Haj in which 1,426 pilgrims were crushed to death in a tunnel. Most were from Indonesia and Turkey.

Mr. Abdul Wahhab said Saudi Arabia, custodian of Islam's holy shrines at Mecca and Medina, has spent around $4 billion in the last two years to improve and extend facilities including the building of new roads and tunnels.

Iran holds war games amid tension

NICOSIA (AP) — Iranian troops with tanks staged what Tehran called military manoeuvres on the southern border with Iraq Sunday amid rising tension triggered by escalating attacks from Baghdad-based rebels.

The Iranians said Saturday that 8,000 infantry from the Revolutionary Guards Corps and an armoured brigade would take part in the manoeuvres in oil-rich Khuzestan province in southwestern Iran.

The manoeuvres were ostensibly to commemorate the May 24, 1982, liberation of the port city of Khorramshahr, 578 days after it had been captured by Iraqis in the early days of the 1980-88 Gulf war.

The seizure of the city in fierce fighting was Iran's biggest and most humiliating loss of the war and its recapture was a turning point in the conflict.

Brigadier General Mohammad Ali Jafari, commander of the Revolutionary Guards' ground forces, said the troops will enter Khorramshahr to "re-enact the glory of its liberation."

But it appeared that the manoeuvres were related to a crackdown on border incursions by the Iraq-based Mujahadeen-e-Khalq, the main Iranian opposition movement.

By several accounts, forces in the region have been on alert for several weeks because of operations by the Mujahadeen.

Gen. Jafari, announcing the crackdown Saturday, accused Iraq of violating the Aug. 20, 1988, ceasefire that ended the war by allowing the rebels to launch cross-border raids.

"We cannot accept that the enemies of our people are getting armed on the other side of the border and attacking the sacred territory of Iran," he said on the state-run Tehran Radio, monitored in Nicotia.

"Providing counter-revolutionary elements and enemies with shelter and their equipment inside Iraq are cases of flagrant violation of the ceasefire," he said.

The Mujahadeen called the accusation a prelude to "terrorist operations...and air raids" against their bases in Iraq.

Gen. Jafari said the Revolutionary Guards were "determined to continue the suppression and pursuit of the terrorist elements until...their wicked acts are absolutely repelled."

He said "counter-revolutionary elements" — Tehran-speak for the Mujahadeen — were trying to disrupt the presidential elections scheduled for June 11.

President Hashemi Rafsanjani is running for a second four-year term amid widespread dissatisfaction over the government's failure to reverse chronic economic problems.

The Mujahadeen, seeking to exploit the internal unrest and political power struggles within the Tehran hierarchy, have escalated their attacks in recent weeks.

The regime has acknowledged several clashes and sabotage raids, including the May 12 dynamiting of eight oil pipelines near the refinery city of Abadan in Khuzestan, 16 kilometres south-east of Khorramshahr.

The Tehran regime's unusual admissions of Mujahadeen operations indicate it is alarmed at the rebels' escalating campaign.

The Mujahadeen insists the attacks were carried out by its fighters based inside Iran and were launched from Iraq.

Bot diplomatic and oil industry sources have told the Associated Press that there is increasing evidence that many of the recent Mujahadeen operations were mounted from Iraq.

Most of the targets the rebels say they hit were in western Iran near the 1,180 kilometres frontier, although some smaller operations were reported deep in the Iranian hinterland.

Cross-border attacks by the Mujahadeen and its military arm, the National Liberation Army of Iran, could not be launched without the approval of Iraq.

When the Iran-Iraq war ended, Iraq reined in the Mujahadeen. But Baghdad and Tehran have yet to sign a formal peace treaty and are increasingly trading accusations of border incursions.

Baghdad has accused Iran of shelling villages in northern Iraq in operations against Iranian Kurdish rebels based there. Kurdish sources claimed Iranian armoured columns had thrust several kilometres inside Iraq in recent weeks.

Iraq has repeatedly said Revolutionary Guards have supported Shiite Muslim rebels fighting Baghdad in southern Iraq.

There has been speculation that Iraq, in increasingly desperate economic straits because of U.N. sanctions imposed after its 1990 invasion of Kuwait, has unleashed the Mujahadeen again and may even be seeking to divert Iraqis' attention from their plight by engineering a border crisis.

Britain's Queen Mother leaves hospital

ABERDEEN (R) — Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother, the 92-year-old widow of King George VI, left hospital Sunday after an operation to remove a throat obstruction and told well-wishers she felt "very well." One of the British royal family's most popular members, the Queen Mother had been staying in the Balmoral estate in Scotland when she was rushed to Aberdeen hospital last Thursday evening after experiencing difficulty swallowing. As she left Aberdeen Royal Infirmary, she told a group of well-wishers who had gathered outside that she felt "very well," asked how she was feeling, she replied: "Much better thank you. Everybody has been so kind. They have been wonderful." The surgery last Thursday night removed a piece of food from her throat in an operation which caused concern in Britain because of her advanced age. The "Queen Mum", as she is popularly known, emerged from the hospital wearing a deep blue coat and hat. She smiled and waved to the crowd. She was said to be keen to resume her public engagements this week.

British royals 'collect farm subsidies'

LONDON (R) — Britain's royal family, among the richest in the world, is collecting hundreds of thousands of pounds in European Community farm subsidies, a newspaper reported Sunday. "The Queen and Prince (Charles) alone are set to receive nearly £300,000 ($465,000) of taxpayers' money this year," the Sunday Express said. It said £60,000 ($93,120) came from the EC's set-aside policy of paying farmers for not growing crops, which Prince Charles, the heir to the throne, had described as "the greatest monster in the labyrinth" of the Community's agricultural policy. It quoted an Agriculture Ministry source as saying the royal family was "meticulous about claiming every subsidy available." The newspaper said ministry figures showed that Prince Charles could get £40,000 ($62,080) in grants for his 1,112-acre (450-hectare) Highgrove farm in Gloucestershire in west England including £6,400 ($9,933) in set-aside grants. Queen Elizabeth could claim grants worth £250,000 ($388,000) for farming 3,600 acres (1,460 hectares) at her Sandringham estate in eastern England including £50,880 ($78,970) in set-aside grants, it added.

Tasmania gay laws hurt human rights, Amnesty says

SYDNEY (R) — Australia's commitment to human rights was being undermined by the outlawing of homosexuality in the island state of Tasmania, the human rights organisation Amnesty International said Sunday. Amnesty urged Tasmania to bring its anti-homosexuality laws, under which a person can be convicted for committing a homosexual act, into line with all the other states in the country. The United Nations Human Rights Committee said late last year it would investigate the state's anti-homosexual laws, which provide for a maximum 21 years' jail for sexual intercourse "against the order of nature." Next month's world conference on human rights provided Australia with an ideal opportunity to show its commitment to universal human rights by declaring its domestic agenda for action. National Amnesty President Liz Watson said, "Removing the homosexuality law would be a symbol of that commitment," she added.

Australia tackles high lead level

SYDNEY (R) — Australian authorities said Sunday they would clean up soil contaminated by lead in a mining town after it was up to 67 times as much lead as is considered safe. The official report into lead contamination of New South Wales said some families might have to move to avoid harmful buildup of lead in their blood. The soil report, published follows tests last year on 230 30 per cent children which found years old had lead concentrations in their blood higher than recommended limits. The tests were carried out by New South Wales government scientists in the famous mining town, which has operated large lead and zinc mines since last century.

Izetbegovic slams peace efforts; Karadzic hails allies' plan

SARAJEVO (Agencies) — Bosnian Muslim President Alija Izetbegovic rallied his people to defend their republic and slammed international peace efforts as "futile" Sunday but his Serb foes welcomed a new allied strategy on the war.

"We are not going to waste time any longer in futile negotiations," Mr. Izetbegovic said in a statement read out in Sarajevo.

He declared his government would call on "all our citizens who love this country... and call them to unite and use all means available to defend their sovereign and independent Bosnia-Herzegovina."

It was a fiery reaction to Saturday's announcement of a common strategy by the United States, Russia, Britain, France and Spain on containing the Bosnian war and promoting peace.

Muslim hopes for foreign military intervention to halt Serb advances after 14 months of fighting have all but evaporated with the new strategy.

But Bosnian Serb chieftain Radovan Karadzic welcomed the new policy as "realistic" and said he was calling for direct talks between Serbs, Muslims and Bosnian Croats to divide the former Yugoslav republic into three confederated states.

Mr. Karadzic told Reuters by telephone from the Bosnian Serb stronghold of Pale that Serbs and Croats could help the Bosnian Muslims establish "a viable state" in central Bosnia.

"I am inviting Izetbegovic and (Bosnian Croat leader Mate) Boban for direct face-to-face talks concerning territorial issues," Mr. Karadzic said.

He praised U.S. President Bill Clinton and said he was "going to be a great president" for avoiding being pushed into military intervention in the Bosnian civil war.

The allies agreed measures including using U.S. air power if

United Nations safe havens for Muslims are attacked and ensuring arms supplies do not get through to Bosnian Serbs and Croats from their ethnic kin across borders.

Rejection by Mr. Izetbegovic was sure to scuttle the plan, announced by U.S. Secretary of State Warren M. Christopher and the foreign ministers of Russia, Britain, France and Spain.

"This new plan is absolutely unacceptable for us," said Mr. Izetbegovic, accusing the world of moving to "reward aggression and genocide."

S. Korea arrests ex-president's in-law for fraud

SEOUL (R) — South Korea's anti-graft prosecutors arrested a powerful relative of ex-President Roh Tae-Woo on charges of receiving bribes, a Seoul prosecutor's office official said Sunday. He said United People's Party legislator Park Chul-Un was arrested late Saturday for accepting 500 million won ($625,000) from slot machine "godfather" Chung Dok-Jin in return for persuading tax.

20 injured in Bangladesh clash

DHAKA (AP) — Students and police clashed at Dhaka University Sunday, leaving at least 20 persons injured, as Prime Minister Khaleda Zia arrived to give an honorary degree to a Nobel laureate. Police hurled teargas and swung batons at students who were throwing stones and firecrackers, paralyzing traffic inside the sprawling campus. The students, affiliated with opposition parties, were demanding subsidies, part-time jobs and guarantees of employment after they finish school. They also demanded action against "campus terrorism," a reference to the violence among students parties for control of residential dorms.

Thai police target engineers in fire

BANGKOK (R) — Thai police are investigating what role government engineers played in the toy factory fire that killed at least 188 people and injured scores more earlier this month, the Nation newspaper said Sunday. Provincial police chief Colonel Cheu Laoprasert was quoted as saying investigators had already questioned the public works chief who approved the factory's construction plans and more engineers could be implicated. "Several others were involved in the construction and the suspected illegal modifications," Mr. Cheu said. Arrest warrants have been issued for four executives of the toy company, Kader Industrial (Thailand) Co. Limited, on charges of negligence leading to death and injury and illegal modification of a building. Two have been released on bail. Bangkok is seeking the extradition of the other two from Hong Kong.

Pope tells Italian politicians to be honest

AREZZO, Italy (R) — Pope John Paul Sunday told the politicians of Italy, which is mired in a 15-month-old corruption scandal, that they had a duty to be honest. Speaking during a day trip to this Tuscan city the Pope said public administrators had a special responsibility to the people. "It is legitimate (for the public) to expect from them a well-defined behaviour of rectitude in the administration of the common good," he told thousands of people in a square here.

Aborigines may be compensated for lost land

QUEENSTOWN (AP) — Australian aborigines may be compensated by national and state governments for land taken from them during the last 18 years, visiting Prime Minister Paul Keating said Sunday. At the end of three-day official visit to New Zealand, Mr. Keating told reporters the compensation problem is one of many issues following a controversial Australian high court decision last year recognising that aborigines have "native title" to government-owned land. Mr. Keating said he will meet the leaders of six states and one territory next month to discuss how to deal with aboriginal land claims and promote racial reconciliation.

Philippine plane found 9 months after crash

MANILA (R) — Villagers have reported finding the wreckage of a Philippine air force plane with skeletons of crew and passengers still in their seats nine months after it went missing, the Philippines air force said Sunday. A spokesman said the twin-engine Britten Norman Islander, carrying an air force colonel and nine other people, disappeared in August after taking off from Manila for the southern city of Zamboanga. Previous searches had failed to locate the plane. Air Force chief Major-General Leopoldo Acot has ordered a search party to go to the mountains of Romblon Island, 270 kilometres south of the capital, where villagers said they saw the crashed plane, the spokesman said. "All the remained of the victims were their skeletons and the hair on their heads. They were still in their seats," the private Manila radio station DXZL said quoting a local guide who reached the crashed site.

Fight against AIDS in Jordan needs more internal cooperation

By V. Vivekanand
Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — Jordan has more or less managed well in coping with the global threat of AIDS, but officials believe that there should be more cooperation between private physicians and the authorities in detecting and following up cases of the fatal disease and its virus in the Kingdom.

The Ministry of Health has registered 86 cases of both full-blown AIDS as well as HIV infection in Jordan since Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome hit international headlines in 1986 as the most life-threatening yet to mankind in history.

But many cases could remain undetected because of the social shame that the conservative Jordanian society attaches to sex-related diseases, said Saad Kharabsheh, head of the Communicable Diseases Department of the Ministry of Health.

Dr. Kharabsheh noted that those afflicted with venereal diseases could have also exposed themselves to AIDS, and should ideally undergo an AIDS screening as the case is with such patients seeking treatment at government hospitals. But it does not happen most of the time with private doctors, he said.

"Most people suffering from sex-related diseases approach private physicians for treatment for the specific ailment, which does not get reported to the authorities," Dr. Kharabsheh said.

"Very unfortunately, we have to say that the cooperation in this context between private doctors and the Ministry of Health is not up to the desired level," he said.

Of the total 86 cases registered so far in Jordan, 21, including Jordanians and non-Jordanians, are already dead, only 27 of the rest have developed full-blown AIDS, three are showing "AIDS-related complexes" — somewhere between being virus carriers and actual patients — and the rest have been positively identified as HIV carriers who could transmit the disease through sexual contact while not necessarily contracting the disease themselves, Dr. Kharabsheh said.

The virus attacks the body's natural immune system, steadily weakening it and rendering it totally unresponsive to any medicine or treatment. As a result, a simple ailment could develop and claim the patient's life.

No cure has yet been developed anywhere, and the only prevention, as far as individuals are concerned, is "safe sex." Other safety shields are the responsibility of medical institutions such as using "safe" blood for transfusions and not allowing the same syringe to be used on two people.

Laboratories in Jordan conduct around 70,000 blood tests every year, and some of the cases were detected during routine checks.

Others came to light when foreign governments informed Jordan after deporting Jordanian nationals who were found to be carrying the virus.

A preliminary HIV test costs around JD 4, and a "confirmation test" costs JD 25, Dr. Kharabsheh said.

Dr. Kharabsheh said that as a rule any non-Jordanian found afflicted with the virus is immediately deported from the Kingdom. He noted that residence permits to foreigners are issued only after an AIDS screening.

He did not provide the nationalities of those dead or deported, but said they were mostly Arabs and Westerners.

Seventy of the total reported since 1986 were male; 20 of the 27 fully-developed patients were also male, he said, adding that 70 per cent of all cases were within the 15-39 age group.

It has been found that 36 patients contracted the disease through blood transfusion abroad, Dr. Kharabsheh said.

Since six years ago Jordan did not import blood and the Kingdom's blood bank accepts blood donations only after thorough tests for HIV.

It has also been established that 32 of all cases contracted the virus through sexual contact — heterosexual, homosexual and bi-sexual, said Dr. Kharabsheh, in the first public acknowledgement that blood transfusions abroad were not to be exclusively blamed for AIDS/HIV cases in Jordan.

"It is a reality and we might as well acknowledge it," he said.

(Prostitution, one main conduit for AIDS, is a subject that many officials in Jordan wave away and refuse to discuss. The first response from any official is typical: The oldest profession in the world does not exist in Jordan.)

Breaking the taboo, which many sociologists criticise as superficial and an escape from reality, Dr. Kharabsheh said: "The very nature of the Jordanian society prevents us from having any estimate of prostitutes in the country. It may be low, it may be high, but there cannot be any denial of the fact that it exists in Jordan, just as any other country."

Four of the registered AIDS/HIV cases were found to have resulted from intravenous drug usage, where syringes were shared, while one case was found to have been "vertically transmitted" — from mother to the child, Dr. Kharabsheh said.

"We have not been able to pinpoint how the rest — 13 patients — got the disease," he added. "Some of them are uncooperative in providing answers while others are not sure how they could have exposed themselves; but their behaviours were very risky in many areas."

Jordan has a national committee to combat AIDS representing most segments of the society.

The Ministry of Health, in coordination with the committee, offers counselling programmes for AIDS patients and HIV carriers on how to "face life and deal with various situations," Dr. Kharabsheh said.

"We keep close tabs on every case," he said. "The fact that they have AIDS or are carriers of the virus does not have any negative bearing on their national rights. They are entitled as anyone else to have their rights protected and interests defended.

"At the same time, our first concern is to protect others — family members and others who might be exposed to them — from contracting the disease," he added.

Those who may have exposed themselves to the virus while dealing with the patient are screened immediately after diagnosis establishes AIDS or HIV in anyone, he said.

T. Unselling programme includes advice on how to conduct sex life, social and family behaviours, and dealing with ailment. Immediate family members are also given advice on how to deal with the patient.

"The advice also includes on how to bury when the patient is dead," Dr. Kharabsheh said.

Authorities give special attention to students heading for higher education abroad, making them aware of the AIDS threat and advising them how to expose themselves.

"Of course the best method is total abstinence from sex," he said.
